Arab summit reaffirms central role of PLO

Call for independent Palestinian state

ALGIERS, June 10, (Agencies): Leaders of the 21 members of the Arab League pledged unequivocal support for an independent Palestinian state and established a fund that would provide hundreds of millions of dollars annually to finance the uprising in the Israeli-occupied territories.

The Arab summit also implicitly rejected US peace plans for the Middle East and accused Iran of transgression in the Gulf war.

HH the Amir of Kuwait returned home today from Algiers after attending the summit.

The three-day emergency meeting, which closed in Algiers yesterday, promised the Palestinians assistance "by all means and in all forms" to keep alive the campaign of protests against Israeli rule which erupted in the West Bank and Gaza Strip six months ago.

Victory

Yasser Arafat, whose Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) won renewed Arab endorsement as the key to Middle East peace, hailed the summit as a triumph for the youngsters who armed with sticks and stones, have fought running battles with Israeli troops since last December.

"It's a victory for our people inside... it shows the Arab world stands behind the Palestinian uprising. The children who throw stones in Palestine say we will fight on," a jubilant Arafat told a news conference after the closing session.

A final communique slammed US policy in the Middle East, saying it favoured Israel, was antagonistic to the rights of the Palestinian people and encouraged Israel to thwart all attempts to reach a settlement.

The communique said: The conference hailed the uprising of the Palestinian Arab people, which forms a link in the chain of its struggle which has continued for more than half a century, considering it an inseparable part of the Palestinian revolution.

"It hailed the heroic acts which the Palestinian people are registering in resisting the Israeli occupation and its magnificent determination to liberate its occupied land and practice its right to return to self-determination and to set up its independent state on its national soil, under the leadership of the PLO, its legitimate and only representative."

The communique said: "The summit looked at measures to support the uprising, enhance its effectiveness and ensure that it continues and escalates."

Protection

The conference called on the United Nations Security Council... "to work for immediate and complete Israeli withdrawal from all occupied Arab territory, to put the occupied territories under the temporary supervision of the United Nations to provide protection for the citizens and to pave the way for the Palestinian people to practice their inalienable national rights."

Delegates said the Arab leaders accepted a PLO paper with few changes in a political triumph which reversed the humiliation it suffered in Amman last November.

At the Amman summit Arab states dropped the usual reference to an independent Palestinian state as an essential element in any settlement.

Although the Arab kings, presidents and amirs did not directly mention the latest US Middle East peace plan canvassed by Secretary of State George Shultz, they effectively brushed it aside.

Concession

They did this by calling for an independent Palestinian state and PLO representation at any Arab-Israeli peace conference. The US plan ignores the PLO and the idea of Palestinian statehood.

But they made one concession to Washington when they dropped demands that an international peace conference on the Middle East should have full powers to impose a settlement.

The Shultz plan envisages the international conference as a largely ceremonial affair to give an international stamp of approval for subsequent direct talks between Israel and each of its Arab neighbours.

Delegates said the decision to drop this demand in favour of the formula favoured by the Soviet Union which calls for an "effective" conference had left the door open for further talks with Washington.

Summing up how Arabs regard the uprising, Arab League Secretary-General Chedli Klibi said: "The uprising is the instrument and the international peace conference is the way to achieve peace."

Subsidies

The summit agreed to subsidise the uprising against Israeli occupation of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

Eight delegation chiefs, including leaders of the Arab world's four wealthiest nations, yesterday agreed on their future subsidies to the Palestinians and to the two main confrontation states—Syria and Jordan.

After a 2-1/2-hour meeting, sources close to the delegates said that Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates agreed to "specific sums" to be granted for the uprising and to the two states that are closest to the Arab-Israeli conflict.

But the PLO's chief spokesman, Bassam Abu Sharif, told reporters the Arab leaders agreed to keep the precise sums they have promised a secret to avoid showing their hand to the Israelis.

Sharif earlier denied reports that the Arab leaders had rebuffed the PLO's demand for funds to help finance the uprising, saying: "There is no truth to the ALGIERS, June 10, (AP): The leaders of the five North African countries known as the Maghreb, or the Arab west, today held their first summit meeting in history to set the seal on their recent reconciliation and to discuss future collaboration.

Delegation sources said the five leaders met at a luncheon given by Algerian President Chadli Benjedid in his sea-front villa near suburban Zeralda.

Those attending, in addition to Benjedid, were King Hassan of Morocco, President Zine Al Abidine Ben Ali of Tunisia, President Moawia Oulid Sid Ahmed Taya of Mauritania and Libyan leader Moammar Kadhafi.

The sources said King Fahd of Saudi Arabia also took part. He played a crucial role in the May 16 restoration of diplomatic and "fraternal" relations between Algeria and Morocco following a break of more than 12 years.

All six leaders took part in the three-day Arab summit that ended yesterday.

Apology

The participation of Kadhafi in the meeting had been in doubt following an uproar over his public insults to Arab leaders who maintain good relations with the United States.

Without naming the leaders he had in mind, Kadhafi told a plenary session of the Arab summit that the US was "the enemy of the Arab nation, and any Arab leader who collaborates with it is a lackey of imperialism and ... can go to hell."

But speaking in an apparently chastened mood to the closing meeting of the summit last night, Kadhafi offered a back-handed apology for his outburst and announced that he intended to take part in the Maghreb meeting.

He assured the leaders he had meant no personal offence to any of them, adding "such squabbles among Arab brothers only lead to greater Arab unity."

US government decides to sell 40 F-18s to Kuwait

WASHINGTON, June 10, (Agencies): The US government has approved the sale of 40 F-18 Hornet fighter-bombers to Kuwait along with nearly 600 missiles and bombs at a total cost of $1.9 billion, administration officials have said.

The proposed sale to the Arab nation in the strategic Gulf could trigger a battle in Congress, which must approve the sale, with supporters of Israel.

The Hornet is a carrier-based aircraft made by McDonnell Douglas Corp. of St Louis with two engines that give it reliability for long flights over water.

The Reagan administration "informally notified" the Congress of its intention to sell the F-18s today.

Consistent

Congress will have the usual 20-day period for informal consideration of all arms sales. If no sufficient opposition materialises, the Pentagon would then submit a formal, public notification, then Congress has 30 days to disapprove.

When the Kuwaiti request was disclosed last month, a US State Department spokesman said the sale would be "consistent with our longstanding policy on sales of advanced aircraft to the Gulf nations."

State Department officials met with members of the foreign relations committee yesterday to push through the sale, arguing that the sale will further boost the security of the Gulf states against outside threats.

According to a briefing paper submitted to Congress published in the Washington Times newspaper today, the Kuwaiti sale "creates a unique opportunity for the US to alleviate damage done to dialogue in the Gulf region by recent military sales refusals."

Officials said there has been no indication thus far that the influential American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC), the so-called Israeli lobby, will oppose the sale of such advanced weapons to Kuwait.

If opposed, the sale could trigger an election-year battle when many candidates, including the two men running for president, would value the support of AIPAC and the Jewish community.

According to the times, in addition to the jets, Kuwait wants the following weapons: the Hornet is capable of carrying: 300 Maverick air-to-ground missiles, 120 Sparrow air-to-air missiles, 200 air-to-air Sidewinder missiles, 40 Harpoon anti-ship missiles, and several mines and bombs.

Airly

State Department officials have argued that if the Congress fails to approve the sale, Kuwait will turn to France and buy more Mirage 2000 fighter planes.

Kuwait is a valued US ally in the Gulf, through which much of the Western world's oil flows. Last July, the Navy began escorting through the Gulf 11 Kuwaiti oil tankers, re-registered in the United States.

The F-18 has been sold only to Australia, Canada and Spain and never to an Arab or other Third World country.

Kuwait at present has two squadrons of US-made A4 Skyhawks, a plane which is also used by the US Navy but which is less advanced than the F-18.

The F-18 has a combat radius of more than 500 nautical miles, which would allow it to fly from Kuwait almost to the other end of the Gulf or to penetrate deep into Iranian territory, if necessary.

Loyal supporters form core

Zia appoints new caretaker cabinet

ISLAMABAD, June 10, (Agencies): President Mohammad Zia-ul-Haq has appointed an interim Pakistani government which political analysts said would extend his own power but also signalled he would hold elections as promised.

He cancelled a visit to the United Nations and Washington scheduled for next week.

Zia took the oath at noon from 18 ministers at his residence in the capital yesterday.

As expected, Zia will head the government.

The new line-up included a solid core of loyal supporters, eight of them former ministers he sacked last month, and representatives of almost every other shade of national life.

The major new appointment was Sahabzada Yaqub Khan as foreign minister, a close friend of Zia, an old Army colleague, and an experienced international statesman.

Reason

The appointment of so many members of the old cabinet only two weeks after he sacked them supposedly for corruption, economic mismanagement, and lack of Islamic fervour, appeared to confirm the view that one of his aims was to ensure the continuity of his government.

But a senior aide of Zia said: "Butto's opposition Pakistan People's Party (PPP) said it was determined to see a guerrilla victory within three months."

But a senior aide of Zia said: "Butto's opposition Pakistan People's Party (PPP) said it was determined to see a guerrilla victory within three months."

The reappointment of Butto Haq as economic minister also appeared to show charges of economic mismanagement, the analysts said.

Noorani, who has not been reappointed to any post, bitterly rejected Zia's accusations.

He told reporters he was fired due to differences with Zia over the Geneva pact on Afghanistan, which guarantees a Soviet troop withdrawal and calls for mutual non-interference between Islamabad and Kabul. He did not reveal details.

Israel tries to foil Palestinian self-rule

OCCUPIED JERUSALEM, June 10, (Agencies): Israeli military authorities are trying to stop Palestinians establishing a system of self-government in occupied territories after six months of revolt against Israeli rule.

Shmuel Goren, a government administrator in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, said yesterday:

"We are making efforts ... to prevent a situation in which they will have alternative systems (of government), in which the civil rebellion will become a reality."

Goren said in an interview on Army radio that the civil administration in the occupied territories had suffered from the uprising but had not lost control over the local population.

"We are making efforts to continue a dialogue with the population despite everything that has happened ... and not to lose contact with the population," he said.

Die

Two Palestinians died yesterday amid widespread clashes and a general strike called by the clandestine leadership of the uprising to mark the six-month anniversary of the revolt.

Security sources said it was one of the most violent days of the last few weeks.

Israeli troops shot dead a Palestinian youth near the West Bank town of Nablus when he threw a brick at soldiers. A second Palestinian died of a heart attack after his car was stoned near the Dheishah refugee camp. At least three others were injured in clashes.

Troops destroyed the homes of two Gaza residents suspected of throwing petrol bombs. "These actions are taken to deter other Palestinians from throwing fire bombs," an Army spokesman said.

Israeli troops also destroyed the home of a 26-year-old Palestinian who they said confessed to stabbing the Israeli-appointed mayor of Al Bireh in the West Bank, security sources said.

The sources said Khamis Araj of Jelazoun refugee camp north of Al Bireh was arrested during the night and his home was blown up about 12 hours later.

Araj has not yet been charged with stabbing Mayor Hassan Al Tawil, who received serious chest and stomach wounds in the attack outside his town hall on Tuesday.

Following

Tawil had ignored demands to resign from the leadership of the Palestinian uprising.

Security sources said Araj had been following Tawil with the intention of killing him.

Israel has arrested two Palestinian reporters and a writer in a continuing crackdown on Arab journalists. Arab newspapers reported today. An Israeli report said the government may again shut down West Bank schools.

Israeli authorities freed Faisal Hussein, head of the Centre for Arab Studies in East Jerusalem, after he spent nine months in prison without trial.

Palestinian-American activist Mubarak Awad, due to be expelled from Israel imminently, said today he would launch a campaign for his return as soon as he reached the United States.

Khomeini near death from cancer: intelligence reports

WASHINGTON, June 10, (Agencies): US intelligence reports say Iranian spiritual leader Ayatollah Khomeini is riddled with cancer and could die within days or months, an administration official said today.

"He's going to die soon," the official said.

The official, who asked not to be identified, said Khomeini could die as soon as five days, but added "I don't think anybody really knows exactly," citing the Ayatollah's family's history of longevity.

US intelligence reports show Khomeini is suffering from several kinds of cancer, said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Spread

The official said a report by the CBS television network quoting US intelligence sources estimating Khomeini could die in two to three months was "accurate enough to prompt an investigation" on how the information was leaked.

There was no immediate reaction from Iran on the report. In Mazarna, Bahrain, a West European diplomat recently in Tehran said today Khomeini has suffered from cancer of the prostate "for some time." But he said if surgeons had removed the prostate before the cancer spread, then "Khomeini may have been cured and could live for 10 years or even longer."

The diplomat said, however, if the cancer in the prostate gland has spread, the 68-year-old Khomeini could die within months.

CBS television quoted intelligence sources in Washington as saying Khomeini's cancer spread from the prostate to the liver — giving the Iranian patriarch only two to three months to live.

In January 1980, Khomeini underwent heart surgery in Tehran and reports circulating in Iranian capital then were that he was fitted with a pacemaker.

At that time, sources in Tehran said Khomeini suffered from "dormant" prostate cancer described as no threat to his life.

The CBS News acknowledged that previous reports of Khomeini's demise have proved premature but said some US intelligence officers believed the transition to a new government in Iran had begun.

Khomeini had recently made up a new will and the Speaker of Iran's Parliament, Ali Akbar Hashemi Rafsanjani, has been named the commander-in-chief of the armed forces, a title which had belonged to Khomeini, CBS News noted.

US intelligence officials said they believed Ayatollah Hussin Ali Montazeri, the designated heir-apparent, would succeed Khomeini but that the real power would be wielded by Rafsanjani, the CBS News report said.

Montazeri met with two of Iran's senior leaders in the last two days.

Two killed as Iraq attacks ships

MANAMA, Bahrain, June 10, (Agencies): Iraqi warplanes raided a tanker off the Iranian coast at dawn today a day after an Iraqi aircraft missile slammed into a salvage tugboat serving Iranian vessels, killing two of its seamen.

The attacks shattered a two-week lull in the so-called tanker war, a spinoff from the Iraq-Iran war which is almost eight years old.

They appeared to herald a fresh surge in the Iraqi attempt to blockade Iranian oil shipping lanes.

A military spokesman in Baghdad said Iraqi Air Force jets were reconnoitring Iranian waters when they "spotted and attacked a large maritime target," which usually means a tanker.

There was no independent confirmation of the Iraqi claim. But shipping sources in the Gulf and the London-based Lloyd's shipping intelligence unit said the 742-ton tug Salvor was hit by an Iraqi missile yesterday in the northern Gulf.

Lloyd's, which monitors shipping around the world, said two crewmen were killed aboard the Singapore-flag tug. Shipping executives said the casualties were probably Filipinos.

Two vessels resembling Iranian speedboats raced toward a convoy of US warships and re-registered tankers, but veered off without attacking, US Navy officials said today.

Ordinary laws 'inadequate' in S. Africa

Botha extends emergency

JOHANNESBURG, June 10. (AP): President P.W. Botha today extended the two-year nationwide state of emergency for another year, saying ordinary laws were inadequate to maintain order.

Anti-apartheid leaders immediately assailed the announcement, which means hundreds of prominent activists will remain in jail without charge. White women from the Black Sash Civil Rights Group stood along highways in Johannesburg during the morning rush hour with posters saying: "Apartheid is the emergency."

Terror

Botha's proclamation came two days after blacks ended their highest and longest general strike against the white-controlled government. The extension took effect immediately upon publication of a special government gazette in Pretoria, the capital.

"It is indeed the aspiration of the government that conditions will change to such an extent that the declared state of emergency can be lifted," Botha said in a statement.

"Intimidation and terror are aimed at undermining the political, economic and social activities of all our communities. It is also being employed to disrupt our courts and legal procedures," he said.

The emergency regulations allow sweeping powers of detention, outlaw many forms of peaceful anti-government protests and restrict freedom of speech, press and assembly.

Helen Suzman, a long-serving member of parliament for the anti-apartheid Progressive Federal Party, said Botha's announcement was "extremely depressing, and hardly likely to restore confidence in the future stability of South Africa."

"We might just as well prepare ourselves for a permanent state of emergency," said independent member of parliament Jan van Eck. "A minority regime will not be able to govern this country without the very wide and very arbitrary powers afforded by the state of emergency."

Under apartheid, South Africa's 26 million blacks have no vote in national affairs. The 5 million whites control the economy and maintain separate residential districts, schools and health services.

Strike

Despite banning of anti-apartheid groups and restrictions on their leaders, more than 2 million blacks stayed away from work, school and shops from Monday to Wednesday. The strike was called to protest these restrictions and oppose labour legislation that could weaken black unions.

Botha declared the nationwide emergency on June 12, 1986, after two years of daily violence that claimed 1,700 lives. By mid-1987, the violence lessened, although the toll had reached 2,500 from township political violence, anti-apartheid protests and security force action.

More than 100 bombings and land mine explosions have rocked the country in the past two years, most of them blamed on the outlawed African National Congress, the major guerrilla group fighting the government. ANC leaders, in recent interviews, have vowed to escalate attacks.

Decline

Despite a sharp decline in violence in most black townships, new emergency decrees were imposed this year.

In February, 17 anti-apartheid organisations, including the nationwide United Democratic Front coalition, were banned from all political activity.

Looking after husband comes first: Nancy

WASHINGTON, June 10. (AP): Nancy Reagan said on Thursday that a First Lady must be "a stone wall" when it comes to looking after her husband's health, "and if that interferes with affairs of state, then so be it."

Mrs Reagan, in a speech to the World Gas Conference, said "No First Lady need make apologies for looking out for her husband's welfare."

Although Mrs Reagan made no reference to former White House Chief of Staff Donald Regan, her remarks were clearly directed at the critical portrait he painted of her in his recently published book, "For the Record."

The book disclosed that Mrs Reagan consulted an astrologer for aid in helping prepare her husband's schedule. Regan also portrayed the US First Lady as controlling access to the President in the weeks following his prostate surgery in 1985, and having engineered Regan's ouster in the aftermath of the Iran-Contra affair.

Mrs Reagan has refused to comment directly on the assertions in Regan's book. In her speech, she made no mention of astrology.

Norway, Israel settle heavy water dispute

OSLO, June 10. (Reuters): Norway and Israel have resolved a dispute over heavy water sold by Oslo almost 30 years ago, but government sources said the compromise solution would not allow Norway to check whether it was used to make atomic weapons.

Foreign Ministry spokesman John Bjoerndal told Reuters today that Norway could now inspect heavy water left over from a secret 1959 sale to Israel. "The solution is a compromise," Bjoerndal said. "Although we will run chemical analysis, it will give us no real opportunity to find out what it has been used for."

Norway sold the water on condition that it was used only for peaceful purposes. In late 1986 Oslo demanded the right to inspect after suspicions were raised that Israel had used it to make plutonium for atomic weapons.

Israel refuses to confirm or deny that it possesses such weapons and initially turned down the request.

Bjoerndal said the water, of which about nine tonnes remain from the original 20, had been mixed with supplies from other countries. A Norwegian request to inspect the water at Israel's dimona nuclear reactor had also been turned down.

Compromise

But in this week's final round of negotiations in Oslo, Israel had reversed its original rejection of a request for the Vienna-based International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to inspect the water on Norway's behalf.

"That was their part of the compromise," one government source said. "We have also won the right to inspect our water, through the IAEA, every time it is used in the future."

Theo Koritzinsky, a left-wing member of parliament who played a key role in questioning what happened to the water, said Norway had given in to Israel by conceding that it could not prove how the water had been used.

Palestinian state

Arafat initially asked the summit for $600 million a year, saying the revolt cost the PLO more than $50 million per month in relief, compensation for wages lost by strikers and medical expenses of injured rioters.

The sum was reduced after negotiations among the eight-member committee.

The Gulf states turned down Arafat's initial request, claiming their funds were limited by instability of the world oil market and the effects of the Gulf war on their oil exports, delegation sources said.

The PLO later agreed to cut its requirements to $300 to 400 million, the sources said, but delegates of the Gulf states said even that was beyond their means.

At the 1978 Arafat summit in Baghdad, the oil-rich states promised the PLO, Jordan and Syria a subsidy of $3 billion spread over a 10-year period. Of this, the PLO was to receive $400 million, or $40 million per year.

King Hussein of Jordan complained to the summit on Wednesday that only a small part of the subsidy ever reached the recipients.

Condemn

On the Gulf war, Iraq and its conservative allies made last-minute gains, inserting a strong condemnation of Iran for rejecting peace initiatives and terrorism in Gulf neighbours like Kuwait and Saudi Arabia.

The communiqué welcomed Iraq's recent successes on the battlefield and promised Arafat solidarity to help to recover the rest of Iraqi territory under Iranian occupation.

The conference also condemned the American aggression against Libya, an apparent reference to US air raids in April 1986.

It also expressed its support for Libya's sovereignty over the Gulf of Sirte, in accordance with international agreements.

Egypt

Saudi Arabia and North Yemen called on the summit to approve the immediate readmission of Egypt to the Arab League but were rebuffed by the summit host, Algeria, sources at the meeting said.

The delegates, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Algeria and the moderate pro-Egyptian majority in the 21-member Arab League reached a compromise that would have the way for Egypt's possible readmission at the next regular summit of the League scheduled for November in the Saudi capital, Riyadh.

But Libya and Syria maintained their uncompromising opposition to Egypt's readmission, the sources said.

Israelis say Arafat emerged the victor and the Middle East peace process the loser at the summit. Returning from the United Nations today Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said he was not surprised by a summit resolution calling for the creation of a Palestinian state, but predicted it would have little effect.

Other new ministers included Sardar Wazir Ahmad Jozzezi of Baluchistan, Ellahi Bakhsh Somroo, a powerful politician from Sind province, PPP associate Mir Hazar Khan Bujari, and young technocrat Nisar Ali Khan.

Zia told the cabinet at a meeting later that its first priority would be to ensure elections were held, the official APP news agency reported.

It said Zia also gave the cabinet four other priorities: accelerating a process of Islamisation, devising a system of speedy and inexpensive justice, restoration of peaceful conditions and economic recovery.

He "emphasised the need to streamline administration to make it honest, efficient, impartial and accountable" and called for measures to effect austerity and maximum decentralisation of authority, APP said.

In Karachi, Benazir told supporters Pakistanis cared more for an election date than a caretaker government.

"The people want a date for elections and this should be announced without further delay," she said.

She said Zia had brought in his own men in the cabinet as expected, and added: "The public is wondering why the parliaments (National Assembly and four provincial assemblies) were dissolved if the same old faces were to be sworn in."

Zia had been scheduled to visit the United States beginning June 11. He was to address the United Nations special session on disarmament, meet with President Reagan and see some American cities.

"The trip is off," said a US diplomat speaking on condition of anonymity. No specific reason was provided.

Harrods girls selling sex

LONDON, June 10. (Reuters): Harrods, the department store where Queen Elizabeth shops, has launched an investigation into a newspaper report that some girls working at its perfume counters sold sex to customers.

The Daily Mirror tabloid said in a front-page story headlined "Sex for sale in Harrods" that freelance salesgirls, hired through agencies, earned up to £1,000 ($1,800) a day in cash and gold jewellery to take part in champagne, sex and drugs parties.

"They are serious allegations and therefore we are holding a full inquiry into the matter," a spokesman for Harrods said.

Aid workers describe heavy casualties

Somali troops kill dozens

NAIROBI, June 10. (AP): Somali troops have executed dozens of men and destroyed homes of suspected rebel sympathisers in Hargeisa town where at least 1,000 people have been killed or wounded in recent fighting, foreign aid workers airlifted from the war zone said yesterday.

The evacuees, some of more than three dozens who arrived in Nairobi on Wednesday, could not give an accurate count of the number killed or wounded in fighting that began with a moonlit rebel attack May 31 in the northern town of Hargeisa.

Nor could they say how many of the casualties were civilians, soldiers or rebels.

However, their accounts depicted bloodier hostilities than so far admitted by the pro-Western government of Maj. Gen. Mohammed Siad Barre.

Jean Metenier, 28, a French technician working for the German emergency doctors humanitarian organisation, said about 1,000 wounded were admitted to Hargeisa hospital in the first five days of clashes.

"Probably most of them were soldiers," he said. "I think in town, a lot of people have been injured, mostly civilians."

Bodies

Metenier, who was responsible for renovating the hospital, said he saw dozens of bodies around the town, Somalia's second largest, including almost two dozen corpses of young men in civilian garb found behind his house.

"The soldiers would make summary trials, and then execute them," said Metenier, whose house was next to that of Gen. Mohamed "Morgan" Siyad, Somalia's northern Army commander and Barre's brother-in-law. "They were all in civilian clothes and all young men."

Metenier said he did not witness the executions, but heard the gunfire and counted 21 bodies between May 31 and June 2.

He said troops operating bulldozers one day scooped up five of the bodies behind his house and dumped them on a street corner a block away.

Radicals prevented from meeting N. Koreans

Students battle police

SEOUL, June 10, (Reuters): South Korean riot police today repeatedly battled radical students trying to leave Seoul and march to the border to meet a youth delegation from communist North Korea.

Black armour-plated riot control trucks spewed hundreds of "quads of skin-burning pepper" as an estimated 4,000 students who refused to turn back at a road block in northern Seoul. Earlier thousands of club-wielding students attacked police lines around the capital's Yonsei University.

Meanwhile, the 13-member Northern delegation arrived at the Panmunjom border village accompanied by journalists and officials, according to the North Korean Central News Agency (KCNA) monitored in Tokyo.

The South Korean government, which maintains the proposed student meeting is merely a Pyongyang propaganda ploy, mobilised an estimated 60,000 police to stop the Southern radicals joining them.

By afternoon, the time at which the "national reunification" meeting was due to take place, no Southern students had reached the Imjin River, threshold to the demilitarised zone and Panmunjom.

A Reuters correspondent at Imjin-Gak, on the southern shore of the river, said two youths managed to get within several hundred metres of the crossing point but they were stopped by a huge police presence.

Another man was arrested as he tried to take a mountain trail down to a bridge over the Imjin, the last natural barrier on the route from Seoul to the border 50 km north of the capital.

In all, the correspondent said, only 37 of the promised 40,000 student campaigners managed to elude police and reach the town of Munsan, a few km before Imjin-Gak. All were detained in the town. Some of them were kicked and punched as they were hauled away.

There were 10 extra road blocks today on the already heavily guarded main highway running north from Seoul towards Imjin-Gak.

Back in Seoul, some 4,000 students lay down in the road leading north and dared police to move them, witnesses said. The lie-in lasted the time it took police to bring up their armoured gas trucks which quickly dispersed the protesters.

Arrests

Police made more than 100 arrests and made the detainees kneel on the road, witnesses said. The North Korean delegation at Panmunjom, meanwhile, was making the best of the situation.

KCNA said delegation chief Ko Ung-Sam, from Kim Il-Sung University in Pyongyang, entered the conference hall at the border village at the prescribed hour and sat waiting for his Southern counterparts.

"He expressed the belief that the South Korean students will certainly make their appearance at the place for talks, because they initiated talks and designated the date and time for talks," the official agency said.

North Korean newspapers earlier criticised the Seoul government for preventing its students attending the talks, which it said were aimed at furthering national reunification.

Southern students also wanted to express support for Pyongyang's demand to be allowed to co-host this summer's Olympic Games.

Criminal act

Earlier KCNA quoted Rodong Simun, the newspaper of the ruling Korean Workers' Party, as slamming Seoul's decision to thwart Southern participation in the border talks.

"This is an arbitrary and Fascist anti-national criminal act that can be committed only by the Roh Tae-Woo group which stands in awe of the people and is opposed to reunification," the Northern daily said.

South Korean President Roh, who took power in February after the country's first free election in 16 years, opposed the student radicals' plan to march to Panmunjom.

On Wednesday, though, he again stressed his personal commitment to working towards national reunification, asking the student leaders to trust his government's efforts on this path.

Indians can have sex with foreigners

NEW DELHI, June 10, (AP): The Law Ministry has rejected a proposed fine and jail term for Indians caught having sex with foreigners, saying the plan for fighting AIDS would violate the constitution, news reports said today.

The Indian Council for Medical Research earlier this week proposed the three-month jail sentence and fine as a way to stop the spread of the deadly Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome.

All but one of the 12 AIDS deaths in India were people who had contracted the disease abroad, according to the council.

The proposal, which did not say how the law would be enforced, prompted mixed reaction.

The Indian Express newspaper, in an article today under the headline, "No sex please, we are Indians," raised the specter of a "police peeping squad" with "special accessories" to bring culprits from the bedroom to the jailhouse.

Despite the rejection today, Dr S.P. Tripathi, a director general of the council, told the newspaper the issue would be raised in parliament next year after a national debate.

Tripathi said he would like the legislation to include mandatory testing of all people arriving in India from abroad, including returning Indians. But he insisted the move was not meant to scare away tourists.

Three killed as rival Palestinians clash in Beirut

BEIRUT, June 10, (AP): Rival Palestinian commando factions battled with howitzers and mortars to Beirut's Chatilla and Bouj El Barajneh refugee camps through the night until soon after dawn today.

Police said three people were killed and 15 wounded in the fighting between Yasser Arafat's Fatah faction and the dissident Fatah-Uprising, led by Col. Saeed Mousa.

The casualties raised the known toll from two days of fighting to five killed and 25 wounded.

The thud of exploding shells echoed across Beirut until a ceasefire called by a security committee, comprising representatives of all Palestinian factions, took hold early this morning, a police spokesman said.

The ceasefire, the second in as many days, was "generally holding," the spokesman said. He cannot be named understanding regulations.

Mousa broke with Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organisation in 1983 and established headquarters in Damascus, the Syrian capital.

Scores of people, many of them civilians, have been killed.

Israel's use of teargas caused miscarriages

TEL AVIV, June 10, (Reuters): An Israeli Member of Parliament said on Thursday that the Army caused up to 30 miscarriages through misuse of teargas to quash a Palestinian uprising in the occupied Gaza Strip.

Dedi Zucker of the Citizens' Rights Movement made the allegation in a letter he sent to the Health and Defence ministries with a separate report by six Israeli doctors accusing the Army of excesses.

"The evidence is strong that gas has been misused. Unnecessary damage has been caused, including death or miscarriages, mainly by throwing it indoors," he told Reuters.

"Many times teargas is directed at closed areas despite professional warnings of the substantial danger to life."

Zucker said doctors at Gaza's Shifa Hospital believed that 30 of 478 miscarriages between December and March could be attributed to teargas. The 30 were among 116 women who said they were exposed to the gas.

He said Israeli officials were aware of these statistics.

Zucker, a human rights activist, organised the team of Israeli doctors with the help of defence officials — to examine the medical situation in Gaza amid accusations the Army used excessive force.

An Army spokesman denied Zucker's allegations, saying they contradicted the very conclusions of the six doctors.

"The doctors' report that he himself submitted says that not only is there no connection, but also that there has been no rise in miscarriages compared to the same months last year when there was no uprising," the spokesman said.

The spokesman claimed the Israeli forces did not use teargas in enclosed areas, but used it to disperse crowds.

"Teargas itself cannot cause miscarriages. But if women in pregnancy are part of a demonstration, and teargas is fired, the excitement — the byproduct of the demonstration — can stimulate miscarriages," he said.

Thaw in Israeli-Soviet ties

Shamir meets Shevardnadze

UNITED NATIONS, June 10 (AP): Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir met Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze on Thursday to discuss the Middle East, in what could signal a warming of Soviet-Israeli relations.

It was Shamir's first meeting with a Soviet official since he met then Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko in 1984. Shevardnadze has met previously with Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, who takes a more flexible position on the Middle East.

Shamir and Shevardnadze entered a UN conference room separately for a meeting but did not speak with reporters.

The Soviet Union broke diplomatic relations with Israel during the 1967 Middle East war but recently increased contacts and moved toward exchange of consular officials.

COLOMBO, June 10, (AP): The ruling United National Party swept two districts in polling for a regional council in southern province, election officials said today. Election-related violence left five people dead and severely reduced voter turnout.

Ballot counting continued in the province's third district, Galle, and observers said the UNP was likely to capture most of its 22 seats as well and take a clear majority on the 53-member council.

Bandula Kulatunga, of the elections department in Colombo, said results from Thursday's voting in Hambantota district gave the UNP 12 seats and one each to the United Socialist Alliance and an independent candidate.

In Matara district, the governing party also captured 12 seats, while the United Socialist Alliance won five, he said.

Southern province was the seventh of the island nation's nine provinces to elect councils. Polling dates have not yet been set in the Northern and Eastern provinces, where the five-year-old Tamil insurgency continues. The UNP also won majorities on the councils in the other six districts.

The councils were established in an accord signed with India last July that has filled so far to end the Tamil revolt in the North and East of the island.

Autonomy

The councils are intended to give more autonomy to the provinces without giving the Tamil minority a separate nation.

But militant Sinhalese claim the accord gives away too much and have been fighting unsuccessfully to block the elections.

During voting Thursday, Sinhalese extremists of the People's Liberation Front killed a minor government official in southern province, and police killed an unidentified Sinhalese youth.

Three people were killed earlier in the week in election-related violence in the province. The front also blew up electricity and telephone lines, burned buses and fired on trains.

India, which to show support for a Palestinian uprising refused to play Davis Cup tennis in Israel, has pledged to upgrade official ties with the Jewish state, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said yesterday.

Israel radio reported that Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi promised an American Jewish leader in New York that India would increase diplomatic relations in the next two weeks. It said Rajiv asked that the promise remain secret.

India has no official representation in Israel, although the Israelis have a consulate in Bombay accredited to the state of Maharashtra.

HH the Amir (second right) returned to Kuwait yesterday after attending the Arab summit in Algiers. The Amir was received by HH the Crown Prince and Prime Minister Sheikh Saad Al Abdullah.

Amir receives Arab leaders

ALGIERS, June 10, (KUNA): HH the Amir received at his residence in Algiers yesterday the President of the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen, Haydar Abu Baker Al Attas and later he received the President of Mauritania, Moawya Ould Ahmed Al Tazi.

The Amir received also President Amio Gemayel of Lebanon and received the Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques King Fahd Bin Abdul Aziz.

The Amir visited the Amir of Bahrain Sheikh Tasa Bin Salman Al Khalifa.

56 per cent pass secondary school arts exam

THE Minister of Education, Anwar Al Nouri, yesterday announced the results of the Secondary School Certificate arts exam. Among those who appeared for the exams 56 per cent passed, which was far below the last year's result of 73 per cent.

Alisar Saqqallah, a girl student from Fajr Al Sabah private school topped the list with an aggregate of 98.4 per cent.

The minister said that the success rate for public schools was 63 per cent, slightly more than that of private schools.

Schools for adult education were placed at the bottom with a bare average of 20 per cent.

Computer science to be introduced

THE Undersecretary at the Ministry of Education, Abdurrahman Al Khudari, issued a decision to incorporate computer science into the secondary classes curriculum as of the academic year 1988-1989. Initially, the experiment will be introduced in some of the girls and boys and schools of the ministry and will encompass all schools in the future.

UAE condemns acquisition of N-weapons by Israel

UNITED NATIONS, June 10, (KUNA): Arab states yesterday paid tribute to UN efforts to promote disarmament and curb the arms race, but warned that Israel and South Africa's nuclear capabilities pose a threat to the world.

Speaking in the General Assembly's special session on disarmament, Mohammad Hussein Al Shaali, chairman of the delegation of the United Arab Emirates, condemned the acquisition of nuclear weapons by the two states which he said could destabilise the Middle East and Africa.

It is important, he said, that the international community acts to ensure that the two countries place their nuclear facilities under international inspection.

Al Shaali said his government supports the creation of a nuclear weapons-free zone in the Middle East.

Sudanese representative Amin Abdoun told the meeting their special session reflects the concerns of the international community about the future of the world. He said a regime of collective security is essential.

Guarantees

While the US-Soviet summit is commendable, he said that notwithstanding their achievements the arms race continues.

He called for denuclearised zones in the Middle East and other regions and condemned the nuclear power programmes of Israel and South Africa.

Foreign Minister Jaddallah Azouq Al Talhi of Libya said until real and enhanced detente has been established, non-nuclear states need guarantees against the use or threat of use of such weapons.

"The fact that the racist regimes in occupied Palestine and South Africa have acquired nuclear capabilities confirms the conviction of the people of Africa and the Middle East that security imbalances will persist in their regions," he said.

Al Talhi warned that the collaboration between South Africa and some major Western states will boost its nuclear capabilities and create "a nightmare" for Africa.

He also deplored attempts by "certain countries and industrial corporations" to bury or store nuclear and industrial wastes in Africa.

Naji Al Ali murder case

Arab accused of spying for Israel

LONDON, June 10, (KUNA): An Arab accused of storing an arms cache in his bathroom was secretly spying for Israel, the central criminal court in London heard Friday.

Jordanian research assistant Ismael Sowan was arrested by British anti-terrorist squad detectives when they found arms, and explosives, rifles and grenades at his Hull home, northern England.

Sowan alleged that he was looking after them for Abdel Rahman Mustapha, who is suspected by British police of being involved in the murder of the prominent Palestinian cartoonist, Naji Al Ali, in London last year.

Confirmed

Sowan admitted candidly to the court that he was working for the Israeli security service, Mossad.

Part of his brief was "to feed the Israelis information about Mustapha's movements in England."

When British police checked Sowan's confession with the Israeli Embassy in London they confirmed that "he was in contact with them on occasions and in the summer last year he had told them that he was storing these suitcase for Mustapha".

Nothing, who represents the prosecution said.

Sowan, 28, denied illegal possession of the explosives and arms.

He said that he had no idea what was in the suitcases when he agreed to store them at his home.

Paid

The defence lawyer, David Cocks, said Israel's admission that Sowan had been working for them for some time was "an astonishing, bizarre and intriguing feature to the case."

He said Sowan was born a Palestinian in Jerusalem and "trod through a maze of conflicting loyalties."

The lawyer told the court that Sowan "had been paid by the Israelis for a long time."

"They paid for his flat while he was living in Paris and was given a reasonable sum each month. When he came here they paid him 600 pounds a month for what he was doing. He was keeping the eye open on behalf of Mossad."

Suspicious

After Mustapha asked him to look after the suitcases while he was abroad, Sowan became "suspicious" about their contents, said Cocks.

"He made an appointment to see the Israeli authorities while he was on holiday there. They told him not to worry and that a man called David would be in touch with him when he arrived back in England," the defence added.

But shortly after his return police raided his flat and he was arrested.

Awadi criticises UNDP practices

GENEVA, June 10, (KUNA): A senior Kuwaiti official yesterday made stinging remarks about negative practices of the UN Development Programme and urged special attention to development projects in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, in Lebanon and in Arab least-developed countries.

Miss Meriam Al Awadi, assistant undersecretary for technical cooperation in Kuwait's Planning Ministry made the remarks while addressing the 35th session of the UNDP's board of governors, currently meeting in Geneva.

Noting that Kuwait has voluntarily condescended its share of financial assistance by the UNDP since 1976, Miss Awadi said the country foots the bill for its requirements from technical assistance extended by the programme.

"My country," the official added, "expects the programme to provide it with high-level experts enjoying experience, creativeness and performance according to requisites of the state."

She noted, however, that some experts seconded by the UNDP to Kuwait lack such qualifications and blamed some UN specialised agencies for failure to make the necessary effort in selection of experts.

The official also criticised the UNDP for adopting standard forms for technical assistance projects irrespective of their suitability to apply to different agricultural, industrial, training and educational purposes.

She further made note of the emphasis made in project agreements on the special rights of executive agencies without giving equal attention to rights of the concerned state and called for renewal of the procedure.

In conclusion, Miss Awadi drew attention to lack of certain specialisations among regional advisers, hoping the programme will give consideration to chances of making use of them at the appropriate time and for adequate periods.

Juvenile centres

SOURCES at the Social Affairs and Labour Ministry said the juvenile care act No. 3/1983 authorised new centres and offices to provide care and social services to delinquent juveniles. These centres included the Youths Social Hostel which catered to both sexes. Inmates were referred to the centre by the Criminal Intelligence Public Department, Social Service Department at the Education Ministry including parents of the juveniles.

272 students expelled for cheating

AN ASSISTANT undersecretary for planning and development at the Education Ministry, has said that 272 students were not allowed to complete examinations of the Secondary School Certificate because of cheating. He added that the ministry had strictly controlled the exams to prevent cheating among students. Al Hamad said that the exams this year had been normal and that the only complaint the ministry had received from students concerned was the short time allowed for the Islamic education exam.

KUWAIT PRESS DIGEST

Summit outcome welcomed

A KUWAITI daily, Al Rai Al Aam yesterday welcomed the outcome of the extraordinary Arab summit, in Algiers which wound up sitting Thursday night, hoping that the decisions reached "will be implemented and the good intentions translated into real work."

The newspaper, writing about priorities after the summit, said the popular uprising in occupied Palestine, for which the summit was convened, has given the Arabs the cause to agree on without sensitivity or hesitation.

"The feeling of the Arab leaders that the uprising is exercising its activity in its own domain and natural environment, away from their lands and borders, has dropped political sensitivities, increased support for it (the uprising) and facilitated bridging various stands toward it," the newspaper said.

In the past, the Arab regimes, intentionally or unintentionally, have wasted the energies and potentialities of the nation and paralysed all calls for solidarity, cooperation and adoption of political realities and seriousness, over their marginal differences rather than the basic cause, noted the daily.

But now that the summit has taken a stand, "the present phase demands a firm, determined and strong Arab position leading to use of the funds and other available means for support of the uprising," Al Rai Al Aam suggested.

Deadline to decide on senior officials

THE Council of Ministers has given until the end of this month for ministers to make decisions regarding their undersecretaries, assistants and senior officials, a Kuwaiti newspaper reported on Thursday.

During this period, separate meetings will take place between ministers and senior officials in order to ascertain the officials' intentions regarding their posts. Lists of senior officials at some ministries, noting those who wish to resign and those who want to stay, were sent to the Council of Ministers. The resignations will make way for younger officials to fill the positions.

Meanwhile, the Ministry of Communications has made changes in the posts of the assistant undersecretaries and notified two of them of their dismissal for the year. The daily said that of the 118 senior officials in different ministries, only a few were expected to resign.

Plan to modernise Kuwaiti passport

HAJJI AL MIZAYEN, the assistant undersecretary for nationality and passport affairs at the Ministry of the Interior, has said that a new committee has been set up to study the modernisation of the present Kuwaiti passport. He also mentioned the new law which had increased the waiting time for Kuwaiti nationality for foreign women married to Kuwaiti citizens from five to 15 years.

Speaking on other matters, Al Mizayen pointed out that the passports and nationality department completed about 1000 passport formalities a day and denied delays in the processing system. He added, however, that sufficient time should be given for such things as the issuing of new, or replacement of passports and that it was unreasonable to expect the department to deal with formalities quickly in the summer months.

Kuwait, Jordan sign agricultural agreement

AMMAN, June 10, (KUNA): Jordan and Kuwait on Wednesday night signed an agreement on bolstering cooperation in the agricultural sector, particularly in the field of exchanging scientific and technical data and visits by experts from both countries.

The agreement was signed by director general of the Public Authority for Agriculture, Affairs and Fish Resources, Sheikh Ibrahim Al Duaij Al Sabah, who is currently visiting Jordan, and Jordanian Minister of Agriculture, Marwan Al Homoud.

The agreement stressed the importance of cooperation in exchanging scientific and technical information in the agricultural sector, including agricultural research between the Jor-danian national centre for agricultural research and transfer of technology and both the public authority for agricultural affairs and fish resources and Kuwait Institute for Scientific Research with the aim of benefiting from scientific researches on the agricultural field.

Exchange

The agreement also called for the exchange of experts and consultants in the field of grains, particularly wheat, development of afforestation, marketing of agricultural products and policies of subsidising these products and protecting agricultural resources and grazing lands.

The two sides agreed on encouraging joint agricultural projects in Jordan and the exchange of agricultural products, particularly vegetables, fruits, poultry products and sheep.

Sheikh Ibrahim spoke at the signing ceremony and expressed Kuwait's thanks for Jordan for its readiness to participate in the plan for afforestation of Kuwait.

Basis

Sheikh Ibrahim also said that during his visit to Jordan, "we succeeded in laying down the basis for coordination between the authority and the Jordanian Ministry of Agriculture."

He expressed hope that such contacts would continue to consolidate relations in the interest of both Arab countries.

Sheikh Ibrahim invited the Jordanian Minister of Agriculture who accepted the invitation and the date is to be decided later.

Sheikh Ibrahim and the delegation accompanying him will return to Kuwait on Friday at the end of a week-long visit to Jordan.

Planning council priority for food security

THE Secretary-General of the Supreme Council for Planning Foad Abdel Rahman Mulla Hussein yesterday said that the council's economic committee is bent on setting up a future perspective for the country's economic structure.

In a statement to KUNA, Hussein added that the committee proposes the best ways, through which a system is built on objective basis and takes into account priority development process in the various sectors.

Within this framework, he noted, the economic committee hosted board chairman and director-general of the Public Authority for Agriculture, Affairs and Fish Resources Sheikh Ibrahim Al Duaij to get acquainted with the authority's role in achieving the food security strategy and the problems facing the crop and animal production.

Sheikh Ibrahim, in his explanations, touched on some of the problems which confront investors in the agricultural sector, most important of which is the stoppage of credit and support extended by the Credit and Savings Bank Hussein said.

The head of the authority said that due to the special attention given by citizens to palm trees, the authority along with the Kuwait Institute for Scientific Research focussed on conducting tests in an effort to obtain good and new strains of this fruit-bearing tree.

The secretary-general of the Supreme Planning Council quoted Sheikh Ibrahim as indicating that cooperation and coordination between the six states of the Gulf Cooperation Council is vital in the field of food security, fisheries, poultry and dairy products.

Kuwaiti delegate criticises IAEA's report on Israeli nuclear capabilities

VIENNA, June 10, (KUNA): Arab delegations participating in the meetings of the board of governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency vehemently criticised a report by IAEA's director-general Hans Blix on "the Israeli nuclear capabilities and their danger on world and regional peace."

Blix was entrusted to prepare a report on the topic by the agency's general conference held here in September, 1987.

In statements to KUNA, head of the Kuwaiti delegation Abdullah Munayes described the report as "meagre, weak and does not meet the requirements" in this respect.

Munayes, who was speaking on behalf of Arab delegations, said Blix only stressed some general ideas and well-known concepts without adding anything new.

The secretary-general had plenty of time to receive Israeli replies to his queries about the nature of Israeli nuclear installations and the agency's right to inspect them, Munayes said. Blix presented an ambiguous explanation of the disappearance of heavy water obtained by Israel from Norway in 1959 which Israel said it was subject to Norwegian guarantees, he said.

Munayes noted, however, guarantees should be obtained from the IAEA, not from a certain country.

Munayes, chief engineer at Kuwait's Ministry of Electricity and Water, said Arab delegations are presently preparing an appropriate reply to the meagre report in co-ordination with other countries who sympathised with the Arab viewpoint.

The Arab board of nuclear energy will hold a meeting next Tuesday in Tunis to discuss the outcome of this meeting as well as Israeli nuclear threats.

In an attempt to cover up shortcomings of the report, Blix said the IAEA is specialised in controlling industrial nuclear installations, but is not able to prepare a study over Israeli military nuclear potentials, said the Kuwaiti official.

The board of governors reviewed here today more than 20 items topped by expulsion of Israel from the agency for its refusal to accept investigation tours by IAEA officials.

Nuclear threat of South Africa on world peace was discussed on the sidelines of the meeting.

University plays key role

IN an interview with a local daily, the dean of the faculty of commerce at Kuwait University, Dr Modhi Al Humoud said the university played a significant role in fostering the administrative and training courses of private sector employees.

The administrative apparatus at the university for the past two years had persistently endeavoured to develop research and academic development, she said.

GCC customs exemption

THE director-general of the customs authority, Ibrahim Al Ghanim, said that directors of customs authorities of the GCC states decided to permit vehicles carrying medical equipment or such designated vehicles attending to any accidents at oil refineries in the GCC states to enter without going through the process of normal customs checks at the borders. He added that customs directors recommended to their last meeting held in Riyadh to continue enforcing the submission of the Certificate of Origin of goods imported. The decision was approved by the GCC Economic and Financial Co-operation Committee.

He went on to state that the meeting reviewed the disputes among the GCC states related to the commercial exchange activities and the problems that face national products of the GCC states at the customs centres of their respective states. These problems occurred due to reasons of health, environmental and security requirements. The committee members will work to find solutions he said.

Al Ghanim stated that the GCC states agreed to an exchange of experiences and views among customs authorities to develop and co-ordinate their activities. The officials of the customs authorities agreed on the proposal of the GCC secretariat to set up a technical committee to discuss various projects prepared in co-operation with the Economic and Social Organisation of West Asia to develop a unified system for transporting goods among the GCC states.

Explosion case verdict June 28

PRESIDENT of the State Security Court, counsellor Mohammad Abdul Hai Al Banay on Thursday said that June 28 will be the day to issue verdict on the five Kuwaitis who were charged with acquisition and possession of explosive materials with the intention of committing crimes.

The State Security Court started its first session in the case last Saturday when the following five defendants: Ibrahim Abbas Zainel, Sulaiman Abbas Zainel, Hassan Ibrahim Mohammad Hussein, Mohammad Ibrahim Abbas Ja'far and Ahmad Hassan Khamees, who is still at large, were accused of planning assassinations and manufacturing explosives to commit crimes.

The judgement hearing will be open to reporters and the public provided that they acquire a special permission endorsed by head of the State Security Court.

Jail term reduced

THE Court of Higher Appeals reduced to seven years an original 10-year sentence imposed on an accused for shooting another man.

The court was informed that the accused suspected his wife of having an adulterous affair with the victim. Keeping a vigil, the accused saw the victim enter his house. He confronted the victim and his wife in the privacy of his bedroom and shot the accused.

Kuwait to be briefed on Moscow summit

SEYASSAH newspaper yesterday reported that American and Soviet envoys will arrive in Kuwait next week. Quoting informed sources, the newspaper said the purpose of the visit is to acquaint Kuwaiti officials with the results of the Soviet and American leaders summit. The American envoys will also acquaint Kuwaiti officials with the results of the latest visit of US Secretary of State George Shultz to the Middle East.

Nomination firmly in hand

Bush starts his battle with Dukakis

By Michael Gelb

LOS ANGELES, (Reuters): Michael Dukakis and George Bush, their nominations firmly in hand as US presidential candidates for the Democrats and Republicans, are girding for a five-month battle in which the better known Bush seems at this stage to be the underdog.

Opinion polls show Massachusetts governor Dukakis leading Vice-President Bush by up to 15 points nationally as well as having a similar substantial lead in the two key states of California and New York, which together account for 83 of the 270 electoral votes needed to win the Nov 8 election.

Opinion polls conducted five months before the election have a mixed record for forecasting the outcome, but most political experts agree the once high-flying Bush has lost the lead.

Surveys show about 40 per cent of the voters hold an unfavourable opinion of the vice-president. Many voters believe he is a weak leader with few strongly held views.

Troublesome

Political experts say this is particularly troublesome because it is difficult to change voters' minds once they decide they do not like a candidate.

Many experts say Bush has been too slow in stepping out of President Reagan's shadow, a difficult task for vice-presidents.

The inability of vice-presidents to break with their patron without appearing either disloyal or politically expedient is a major reason no sitting vice-president has captured the presidency since Martin Van Buren in 1836.

Despite these disadvantages, strategists in both parties say the contest should get closer as the campaign goes along.

They say Bush's best plan may be to hammer away at Dukakis and create public doubts about a man who is still a relatively unknown figure to many Americans.

"It's easier to get your opponent's negatives up than to get your own down," California Republican Party chairman Robert Naylor told Reuters.

Reagan's success in restoring economic prosperity may hurt Bush indirectly by giving voters the luxury of focusing on secondary social issues such as health care and the environment, subjects that tend to help the Democrats.

"People aren't worried about the things like inflation and high taxes, that bothered them in 1980 and 1984," says Naylor. "That leaves a hunch of issues on which it sounds attractive to spend money and the Democrats always outpromise the Republicans on them."

Even Bush's ability to criticise Dukakis's inexperience on foreign policy has been compromised by two recent Reagan fiascos — the Iran arms deal and the embarrassing failure to oust Panamanian leader Manuel Antonio Noriega after he was indicted on drugs charges in the United States.

Some Democrats even argue that Reagan's success in improving relations with Moscow could harm Bush's prospects by reducing American concern about the communist threat.

"If Reagan removes the tremendous fear of communism, he pacifies the Democrats," says Christopher Matthews, a former top aide to ex-house speaker Thomas "Tip" O'Neill. "The anti-communist issue has always helped the Republicans."

A historic desire for change on the part of Americans also works in Dukakis's favour.

Neither party has held the White House for more than two consecutive terms since 1952. Early this year when opinion polls showed Bush defeating any possible Democratic rival, Republican strategists said the cyclical nature of American politics was their biggest concern.

Rotate

"The natural tendency to rotate presidents and the natural scepticism about vice-presidents is working against Bush," says Reagan's former White House political director Mitchell Daniels.

Strategists in both parties say Dukakis's lead partly reflects a desire for a new face, a yearning for a new leadership, a desire for a new face, a yearning for a new leadership, a desire for a new face, a yearning for a new leadership.

By comparison to Jackson, the liberal Dukakis strikes many conservative voters as reassuringly middle of the road. Recent Democratic nominees have been rejected, at least in part, because of a feeling among voters that they were too liberal.

"When polls show two-thirds of the voters say Mike Dukakis is more conservative than I am, something is out of focus," Bush laments. He has vowed to portray Dukakis as a traditional liberal Democrat.

One of Bush's biggest assets appears to be his doggedness in the face of adversity.

"We have to be careful not to underestimate Bush," says Democratic strategist Brian Lund. "He's always underestimated and he plays on that."

Old anti-communist longs for Taiwan

By Andrew Roche

KASHGAR, China, (Reuters): Left behind 40 years ago by the retreating Nationalist Army, a loyal follower of Chiang Kai-shek longs to leave the communist mainland after suffering imprisonment, family tragedy and life in "China's Siberia."

But 3,000 miles (4,800 km) of land the Nationalists call "Red Bandit" territory lie between "Old Wang", now turning grey in China's most westerly city, and Nationalist-ruled Taiwan.

Wang — that is not his real name — confessed he was an anti-communist spy in the 1940s. He was one of those left behind when communist forces drove Chiang's Nationalist armies off the mainland in 1949.

"I was a student of law in Beijing when the communists won, but I had been working as a spy for the Nationalists as well."

"They put me in the Beijing number one prison, which is one of their more comfortable ones, because I pretended to co-operate with them," said Wang, slipping handily in a dingy Kashgar restaurant.

"In the 1950s there were lots of strange criminals in there — a Russian car thief and two other foreigners who had planted a bomb in Tiananmen Square."

"I was a model prisoner, allowed to study and play the saxophone in the prison band. During the Great Leap Forward (of the late 1950s) we were better off than a lot of people outside who were starving. We always had enough food every day."

"They let me out in 1963 and gave me a menial job in Beijing, and I got married. It was a good period. I said all the right things to make them think I was reformed."

"But in 1966 the Cultural Revolution started and Red Guards made me do the airplane (a torture in which victims were forced to bend over with arms outstretched behind) because I was an old Nationalist."

"I knew I was in trouble so I decided to be a hero. Chairman Mao was calling for volunteers to go to remote border areas to open up the wilderness. If I hadn't volunteered they would have sent me to Siberia. I survived because I was clever."

"I had to leave my wife behind. I never saw her again," said Wang, whose furrowed face looks older than his 60 years but whose limbs are vigorous.

"It took weeks on the back of a truck to reach Kashgar. I worked in a construction gang, the conditions were very hard, worse than prison. The worst thing was the loneliness. I was educated, not like my workmates."

"Not many Red Guards reached Kashgar, so I escaped the rest of the Cultural Revolution. In other parts of Xinjiang region, political factions fought battles with guns — all claiming to be the true revolutionaries."

By Michael Goldsmith

ALGIERS, Algeria, (AP): Yasser Arafat and the PLO emerged from the Arab summit meeting greatly strengthened for their confrontation with Israel by the unqualified material and moral support of the Arab leaders.

Saudi Arabia and the other Gulf states for the first time agreed to pay the Palestine Liberation Organisation a substantial subsidy to intensify the 6-month-old Palestinian uprising in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

The amount of the subsidy officially was kept secret to avoid showing the Arab hand to the Israelis. But delegates said it was set at $118 million for the first year.

This fell short of the $600 million a year Arafat said he needed to keep the full heat of the revolt on the Israelis, but it meant a solid boost to what the Palestinian leader has described as the "stone-throwing revolution."

Hurt

The oil-exporting states told the PLO they could not meet its full financial needs because their income has been hurt by an unstable world oil market and by the effects of the Iran-Iraq war. Arafat was widely believed to have overstated his real needs in the expectation that his demands would not be fully met.

Arafat's associates made no secret that he was overjoyed with the outcome of the summit.

The PLO leader said the money would be used to pay relief and medical treatment for injured rioters, help the families

Confrontation with Israel

Arafat greatly strengthened by Arab backing of those killed or injured and compensate strikers for lost wages.

Arafat did not specify what other uses he had in mind for the windfall, but it was clear the subsidy could also allow the PLO to step up its efforts to smuggle small arms and communications and sabotage equipment to the Palestinians.

"The conference stresses its full commitment to extend all the support needed to secure the continuation and escalation of the uprising under the leadership of the PLO," the summit's final communiqué declared.

Fund

However, tightly Israel tries to keep the 1.5 million Palestinians in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip scaled off from the outside world, never an easy task at best of times, the PLO's uprising fund will not make it any easier.

The Arab leaders made a further significant gesture in Arafat's favour by deciding the PLO henceforth should be the sole master of the insurgency fund. This meant Arafat will no longer have to share any part of his funds with Jordan or with a joint PLO-Jordanian support committee.

The summit also endorsed previous Arab decisions to recognise the PLO as the "sole and legitimate representative of the Palestinian people," automatically branding non-PLO Palestinians who choose to work with the Israelis in the occupied territories as traitors.

Endorsing

It reiterated Arafat's earlier scornful dismissal of US Secretary of State George Shultz's latest peace plan and insisted that the PLO must participate with full delegation status in any international peace conference. The United States and Israel regard the PLO as a terrorist organisation and refuse to envisage any role for it in the peace process.

The Arab leaders went beyond previous summits by endorsing more strongly than ever the Palestinians' right to set up a sovereign state in the West Bank and occupied east Jerusalem captured by Israel in the 1967 war. Israel has proclaimed reunited the holy city as its capital and is unlikely to relinquish its control of it.

Nonetheless, the summit's endorsement in effect strengthened Arafat's status as a full-fledged head of state in Arab eyes. It was likely to boost him even further in the eyes of Soviet leaders who have long supported him.

MOSCOW: The public lecture was not very controversial — but someone was still hugging it.

A professor from Estonia, his mass of grey hair and drooping mustache giving him a graying resemblance to Albert Einstein, was speaking on "The origin of mass emotions." Questions from the audience included "Do you consider patriarchy to be a more progressive form of social organisation?" Yuri Afanasyev, a noted historian and supporter of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's reforms, replied.

At the back of the room sat two young men in suits, clearly suffering agonies of boredom. Each occasionally patted the right side of his jacket, as if checking that something was still in place. The reason for this, it finally transpired, was that they were wired for sound. As one edged past to leave the room for a quick smoke, his jacket parted enough to reveal a sophisticated tape recorder.

Subversion

The incident offered a fleeting glimpse of the attitude of the KGB, the Soviet security apparatus, toward reform. Once a patron of reform, the KGB seems these days to be cool toward Gorbachev's plans. The ruling Politburo, are restrained in their enthusiasm for the changes. And the KGB has on several occasions recently warned that the West would try to use the reform programme to subvert the Soviet Union.

The latest expression of concern came in the KGB's own newspaper, Krasnaya Zvezda, a recent addition to the weekly Arguments and Facts (circulation 9.5 million).

"According to information

KGB cool towards Gorbachev reforms received," the column read, the CIA, along with its French and West German counterparts, had decided to intensify subversion against the Soviet Union. This would include agitation for a "bourgeois" multi-party political system and free trade unions. More strikingly, the column warned that one of the main forms of subversion would be the dissemination of "fabrications" about "the growth of opposition to perestroika," as Gorbachev's reform programme is known. The KGB warning comes as Gorbachev supporters are still denouncing a recent newspaper article which they describe as an anti-reform political programme.

Support. Chebrikov is something of an odd-man out in the present leadership. His political roots are deep in the Ukrainian region of Dnepropetrovsk, the power base of former leader Leonid Brezhnev. Brezhnev's 18-year rule is widely described as one of the main sources of the Soviet Union's current problems. (And Dnepropetrovsk is still viewed as a bastion of conservatism: a pro-reform columnist recently lambasted the editor of the Dnepropetrovsk party newspaper for his "Stalinism.") The growing criticism of Brezhnev must therefore cause Chebrikov some discomfort.

From 1968 Chebrikov worked as Yuri Andropov's deputy at the KGB, succeeding his boss in December 1982, after Andropov became the Communist Party's general secretary. Andropov is said to have used his time in the KGB to work out the reforms — more modest and more disciplinary than Gorbachev's approach — he then started to introduce as Soviet leader. Yet Chebrikov's political clout also grew under Andropov's successor, Konstantin Chernenko, whose one-year tenure as leader (1984-85) is viewed as the last gasp of Brezhnevism.

Soviet observers speculate that Chebrikov did indeed support reform when Gorbachev became party leader in 1985. Since then the political spectrum has shifted sharply, and the former advocate of moderate change now looks very conservative next to radical reforms. Chebrikov's published views on history and ideology indicate that he favours only a modest reassessment of the past.

Radical reformers have begun to criticise the cost of agricultural collectivisation (1929-33). In a speech last September, however, Chebrikov stressed that the defeat of the rich peasants (kulaks) was an important revolutionary achievement. Reformers are suggesting that Stalin's abuse of power began in the early '30s. But in his September speech Chebrikov pointedly dated the beginning of Stalin's abuses to the end of the '30s.

Some Soviet observers see another reason for KGB concern at reforms. "Glasnost" (openness) is reducing the KGB and the military and the police to the level of simple government agencies," noted one. "The press has started to write about them, criticise them. They're no longer out of range."

Senior KGB officials have already been the subject of press exposés. A top KGB official in the Ukraine was dismissed in January 1987 after the harassment of a local investigative journalist. More recently the luxurious life style of the KGB chief for the central Asian republic of Turkmenistan has come under scrutiny. Reform-minded intellectuals have begun — so far only in private — to complain of KGB "dirty tricks" against them.

A recently published work by the writer Yuri Arakcheev sheds some light on the KGB's attitude to reform.

He describes how in the late '70s, he was unwelcome to be called to a meeting with a KGB official. The official turned out to be well-educated, low key, and likable. He seemed well-disposed to Arakcheev's struggle to vindicate a man unjustly convicted of murder. And he asked for Arakcheev's views on how to encourage Soviet editors to be more daring in publishing worthy, but controversial, literary works.

Argentina may shut down nuclear plant project

By Randall Hackley

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina, (AP): Financial shortfalls may force Argentina, Latin America's leading user of nuclear power, to halt construction on a third nuclear reactor and a heavy-water plant, its top nuclear official says.

Plans are being made to stop work on the nuclear reactor Atucha II, which is 60 per cent completed, and Arroyito, 90 per cent finished, unless financing is obtained on the government's request, said Emma Perez Ferreira, president of the National Atomic Energy Commission.

"We'll have to stop work on the big ones first if we don't get enough money or obtain financing for the projects," Ms Perez Ferreira, Argentina's top-ranking female government official, said in a recent interview.

A shutdown could hurt Argentina's nuclear industry, which is the most advanced in the Western hemisphere outside the United States and Canada, and cut into its future sales of surplus heavy water.

Contract. Argentina has a contract to build a $100-million, 10-megawatt nuclear reactor outside Lima, Peru. It also has contracts to build a nuclear reactor in Algeria and to provide enriched uranium for a small experimental nuclear reactor at Iran's Tehran University, Ms Perez Ferreira said.

Argentina's nuclear technicians have mastered the entire fuel cycle, which gives them the ability to make nuclear weapons, but officials from President Raul Alfonsín deny this is their plan.

At one time, the nuclear programme was closely tied to the armed forces, in particular the Navy. An admiral headed the Atomic Energy Commission until the early 1980s, and some reports at the time said the military favoured building an atomic bomb.

Argentina mines its own uranium ore in the Andes. It prepares its own fuel, and is capable of enriching the fuel, making fuel elements, running nuclear reactors and reprocessing the fuel. Enriching and reprocessing fuel are the keys to making nuclear weapons.

Research

Argentina, the world's eighth-largest country in territory, has two existing nuclear power plants. Until its economic crisis worsened last year, it had dreams of building four power plants by the end of the century.

"There's no sense in talking now even about a fourth nuclear plant," Ms Perez Ferreira said. Argentina also has an uranium-enrichment plant, six research reactors, and two superconducting magnets.

The nuclear programme is important to Argentina, providing up to 20 per cent of its electrical power, and is a source of pride to a country whose standard of living has declined steadily since the 1950s.

But now Argentina is the developing world's third-largest debtor behind Brazil and Mexico, owing $55 billion. It also has a 247-per cent inflation rate in addition to other severe economic problems, including a loss of real wages for workers.

Indeed, 22 per cent of Atomic Energy Commission's 6,500-member work force have left their jobs since 1983, many for similar posts offering double their pay in Switzerland, Brazil and the United States, Ms Perez Ferreira said.

Neighbouring Brazil has a nuclear-power programme but its sole plant near Rio de Janeiro has had constant troubles. Plans to build two other nuclear plants have been set aside for the time being.

Ms Perez Ferreira, a 52-year-old nuclear physicist, took over the commission last year when her predecessor quit over budgetary disputes with the government. As head of the commission, she reports directly to President Alfonsín.

Denial. Although officials deny any plans for nuclear weapons, Argentina has yet to sign the International Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty.

It opposes the treaty on grounds that it interferes with national sovereignty. The other non-signatory nations with nuclear technology are South Africa, Israel, India, Pakistan and Brazil.

Accidents at Argentine nuclear facilities have left three technicians dead since 1982 but experts say Argentina is not considered unsafe. A radioactive water spill and a burst pipe also briefly shut down Atucha I and the Embalse plant last year and in May.

Greek-Turkish peace initiative set for toughest test to date

By Stephen Weeks

ATHENS, (Reuters): When Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal makes an historic visit to Athens next week, the odds are against a breakthrough on disputes over Cyprus and the Aegean. But the odds have been wrong all year — a year of surprises in Greek-Turkish relations.

Ozal and Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreu defied political pundits in both countries in January, when they launched a peace initiative and set a "no war" course for the oft-feuding NATO allies.

Since then, predictions of failure and impending collapse have greeted each step along the peace path. But the prime ministers, with their prestige stamped on the initiative, have kept the process alive.

Nonetheless, the three-day official visit to Athens, the first by a Turkish prime minister since Greece won independence from Turkish-Ottoman rule in 1830, will be the toughest test to date when it begins on Monday.

Agreements

After numerous minor agreements and lower-level visits to foster rapprochement over the past six months, Papandreu has made clear he will push the most emotive issue dividing the east Mediterranean neighbours — Cyprus.

Cyprus is the central theme in discussions between Ozal and myself and will continue to be during his visit," Papandreu told the Greek parliament this week. "We have a holy duty to protect our fellow nationals."

The island, which gained independence from Britain in 1960, has been marked by repeated clashes between the Greek and Turkish communities.

In 1974, Turkish troops occupied the northern third of the island, following a short-lived coup by Greek Army officers directed by the military junta then ruling in Athens.

Andreas Papandreu

Turgut Ozal

Greek islands sitting just off the Turkish coast.

Security forces will be on full alert during the Ozal trip with numerous groups threatening to disrupt the visit. Violent incidents during preparatory meetings prompted authorities to put Ozal in an isolated luxury beach hotel on the outskirts of town.

Violent anti-Turkish demonstrations by Greek-Cypriots, Kurds and Armenians marred a visit by Istanbul mayor Bedrettin Dalan in April and urban guerrilla group "November 17" bombed the cars of Turkish diplomats when Foreign Minister Mesut Yilmaz arrived in May.

Officials have kept Ozal's schedule a close secret to thwart demonstrations and his only known visits to central Athens will be to meet President Christos Sartzetakis and attend a gala dinner near Acropolis. But others are expected.

Ozal and Papandreu agreed in Davos to start with minor confidence-building measures and as the peace process gathered strength to move on to the fundamental differences — Cyprus and the Aegean.

That step-by-step approach has led to agreements on fighting terrorism and illegal drugs, measures to make military activity in the Aegean more predictable and ease tension, and efforts to build commercial ties between the two countries.

Stunning chart success for new UK group

Bros: a new pop sensation

By Mike Hirano

SINGER Matt Goss has an all-consuming ambition — he wants to be "the biggest band in the world."

It is, of course, something most would be pop stars dream about — but Matt may well see his wish granted — and soon.

He is the 19-year-old frontman in Bros, the new chart sensation who have taken the pop world by storm.

Yet, just six months ago, Matt, his two brothers Luke and their long-time schnitz-fried and bass player Craig Logan were down and nearly out. Their second single When Will I Be Famous had failed almost as spectacularly as their first record I Owe You Nothing.

But then, when they least expected it, came their lucky break. Matt sang unaccompanied on a children's TV show and began shooting up the charts.

It lodged itself at number two, a position equalled by their next single Drop The Bomb, and by their debut album, Push. The LP was awarded a gold disc in Britain on the day it came out.

The trio has been greeted with similar reaction abroad — two songs simultaneously in the German and Danish top ten. And already the group has been offered, and turned down, an opportunity which most other groups would kill for.

Michael Jackson, the idol and inspiration for Matt, wants Bros to open up his summer concerts at Britain's Wembley Stadium — shows that will be played before a total audience of more than 350,000. Three times he upped his financial incentive in an attempt to lure them — the figure finally approached £500,000 — and three times he was refused.

Bros, their management insist, will not play second fiddle to anyone. Not even the pop world's biggest superstar. Instead, the group will embark on a British tour of their own this summer.

No doubt that will witness more displays of Brosmania. In the first four weeks of its existence, the group's official fan club — The Bros Front — was flooded with 15,000 applications. At a personal appearance to sign copies of their album at a record store in London, 5,000 Bros fans brought Oxford Street to a standstill. Worried police had to order the group to leave an hour earlier than scheduled fearful of what might happen if they remained.

Adulation
So far, the group has soaked up the adulation despite the fact that they have been forced out of the South London home they shared by screaming girls who kept a constant vigil outside, hoping for a glimpse of their heroes.

Matt says: "Our mum still lives there, but we had to go. It wasn't fair on her or our neighbours. There were about 130 girls outside every day. They were pulling the fence to pieces. We had to install special mirrored glass on our front windows to stop them all from looking in."

But Bros' reaction in all the attention has not been one of arrogance or resentment. "We just feel totally privileged and honoured by it all," says Luke, the group's drummer. "All we can really say to these people is 'Thanks for giving us such a brilliant response.' As anyone who has been in the limelight will know, it's quite unreal — but we love it."

Indeed, it's everything Matt, Luke and Craig have wanted all their lives. Craig says: "What's happening to us now is all we've ever wanted. From the very first time we started playing together to be pop stars."

Born in Kirkcaldy, Scotland, Craig moved to Camberley in Surrey, where he was eight-years-old and first met Matt in the school dinner queue. Matt recalls: "I turned round and asked Craig if he would lend me 50p to buy myself dinner, and being the fool that he is, he did."

Impressed by his friendliness and generosity, Matt paid Craig back by asking him to join Caviar, the group he had formed with Luke. "We were only 12 at the time," Matt adds.

"We were in bands during our 2nd, 3rd and fourth years at school — and before we even left we had a manager. At the time, the young group Musical Youth were successful, so obviously we thought we were going to be incredibly famous pop stars while we were still at school, too."

Instead, the Goss twins left when they were 16, to be joined six months later by Craig.

Luke says: "From the start, all we did was concentrate on our music. 'Matt and I did various jobs here and there — some labouring and a few mowing lawns — but only to keep the band going. We did it so I could buy new drum skins, or so Craig could get strings for his bass. We'd get some cash, and then we'd continue with the band.'"

Having changed their name to Bros — "We're like brothers, all three of us," says Matt — the group played their earliest concerts to unanimously unimpressed audiences at working men's clubs.

Craig admits: "We were just background music, nobody listened! The only song anyone ever stopped to notice was House Of The Rising Sun. Apart from that, Michael Jackson could have walked in there and no one would have paid the slightest bit of attention."

"It was dead embarrassing, but it was something we had to do. We wanted to learn to play properly and to get a good sound, so we could get out there and play live — and not just have the three of us jumping around miming with bows in our hair. We always knew that people would try to knock us and say that we were contrived, so we were determined to prove them wrong."

In April 1986, Micky Graham — now the group's producer — was persuaded to go and see them play at Lightwater in Surrey. Stunned by what he saw, he contacted Tom Watkins — also manager of the Pet Shop Boys — and he signed them up.

A year later, Bros had a deal with CES Records and the slow and painstaking process of finding fame began. Matt recalls:

Bros: their debut LP 'Push' was awarded a gold disc in Britain the day it came out

"For a good year before any of this happened, we were all working really hard. Still, people think we've just arrived and have been moulded by the record company into an instant, overnight success."

Popularity
"But we've been doing this for ever. As for the way we dress, we're no more image-conscious than any other teenager in the country who wants to look good. So far as our 'pretty boy' label is concerned — well, there's no way I'm going to say that I hate being called a pretty boy. It helps us sell records, fine — but I don't see why I should have to apologise for looking reasonable. If you look like a tub of margarine does that mean you should criticise you?"

Criticism is something which Bros have had to face to almost equal proportion to their popularity. Resentment of their success has been both blatant and brutal. Matt has been pummeled on a London nightclub and robbed of £150. Luke and his girlfriend — backing singer Sheryl Lewis — were pulled from their car and attacked by two angry thugs.

Matt confesses: "It has got a bit hairy lately, because some of the girls' boyfriends have got a bit jealous and we've had plenty of hassle as a result of that."

Perhaps more disturbing has been the relentless pursuit of Bros by certain newspapers. Barely a day passes by when one of the group is not featured in one of the tabloids.

One recent story claimed that Matt had left Bros to go solo. Matt explains: "That was the first totally and completely manufactured article about us. It didn't have a single grain of truth in it. The press are unbelievable."

"I mean, one of the most stupid things we ever saw was when a newspaper printed that Luke and I weren't twins. They said it was a hype, a con cleverly disguised by using make-up so that we looked similar, and then the next day they printed another story about me — except they published a picture of Luke! It was really funny."

Bros can afford to laugh now, but for how much longer? Matt is confident that it will be for a good while yet. "It's stating the obvious, but we've still got a long way to go. We've still got to have our first number one for a start."

"People ask us if we're bothered about always getting to number two, but the honest truth is we're not. It leaves us with that extra bit of mountain to climb — and, in fact, we're thankful it hasn't happened yet."

"If we'd have gone straight to the top, down would have been the only place to go — and it might have turned us into horrible little brats..."

The bidding:

Opening lead: Jack of ♣
It is surprising how you can promote tricks. This swindle occurred in a tournament some years ago. North's leap in the grand slam was, in the least, ambitious. South's opening bid showed 25-27 points, so the combined count might have been as low as 34. Not even North's five-card suit might have been enough to compensate for that, especially since the pair might have been missing an ace. East-West were not doing all that well in the event, and West decided that it was time to roll the waters a little. So he selected as his opening lead the card nearest his thumb, and that turned out to be the jack of hearts. It proved to be a most fortuitous opening.

Outside of the heart suit, declarer had nine fast tricks—three spades, five diamonds and a club. It seemed that the opening lead guaranteed four heart tricks, for under normal circumstances the lead of the jack indicates possession of the ten. Therefore, declarer would not need the club finesse. South won the first trick with the king, cashed the queen and then led the eight. When West produced a low heart, declarer confidently finessed the nine. East was rather surprised to find that he had collected the setting trick.

Left to his own devices, declarer would have coasted home. He would first have tried for a 3-3 heart break, keeping the club finesse in reserve in case he amassed only three heart tricks. As the cards lie, both those chances come home, so declarer could roll up 16 tricks if that were permissible.

YOUR STARS

Aries (March 20 - April 18)

You should stick strictly to what is practical. Avoid spending as if you had all the money in the world. Do not let others snatch the initiative from you. Be a little more tolerant.

Taurus (April 19 - May 19)

The better influence of Mars coupled with that of the Sun will help you to keep out of trouble. You will have something to be really pleased about. Do not do anything that would cost you more than you can afford. Be resolute.

Leo (July 22 - Aug. 21)

Gemini (May 20 - June 20)

You should not try to act more swiftly than is your natural rhythm. However there is no excuse for being sluggish just now. You should not spend too much time reminiscing about what has been.

THE Kuwait Fund for Arab Economic Development is to extend a loan of $12.74 million to Botswana to help finance a road project.

The accord was signed in Gaborone, Botswana, by Kuwait Fund Director-General, Bader Mishari Al Humaidhi and Botswana Vice-President and Minister of Finance and Development Planning, Peter Simako Mmoussi.

The scheme, which entails laying 300 km of road between Nata in the east of the country to Maun in the north west, will improve connections between the country's Ngamiland region and other districts in Botswana.

Work on the project, which is costing a total of $43.31 million is due to begin early next year with completion scheduled for mid-1991.

The Kuwait fund loan will be over a 20-year period, including a grace period of four years, bearing an interest rate of 3.5 per cent annually, which also covers administrative and other expenses.

Talks during Algeria summit make no progress

Arab oil ministers fail to agree on cutting quotas

ALGIERS, June 10, (AP): Meetings among the oil ministers of six Arab members of OPEC have failed to produce any agreement on production quotas, delegation sources said yesterday.

The meetings, taking place on the sidelines of the three-day Arab summit, involve discussions between the two opposing wings of the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

The six oil ministers from Algeria, Libya, Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Qatar and the UAE postponed their attendance at the scheduled June 11 meeting of Opec in Vienna, hoping to resolve their differences in informal talks in Algiers.

Algeria and Libya advocate production cuts while Saudi Arabia and the Gulf countries have defended their production levels. The split between the two camps led to the failure of an April meeting between OPEC and a number of non-OPEC oil exporters.

The non-OPEC countries had offered to reduce their overall output by five per cent, or 183,000 barrels per day, on condition the OPEC group made a matching five per cent cut.

The OPEC countries, have a current overall production ceiling of 15.06 million barrels per day, offered to match the proposed non-OPEC cut barrel-per-barrel, but could not agree on an overall five per cent, which would have lowered their ceiling by about 750,000 barrels per day.

Called Indonesia's Oil Minister, Gin-anjar Kartasamita, earlier this week called on the Arab OPEC members to resolve their differences at the Arab summit to help stabilise prices.

The sources said the informal discussions in Algiers had disclosed three tendencies among the Arab OPEC members.

The Saudi-led group was demanding that current production levels be left unchanged, while the Algeria group called for a sharp production cut for the third quarter of 1988, with a possibility of renewed increases in the fourth quarter to take account of higher winter demand. A third group advocated simple alignment with world prices and demand, the sources said.

The sources said they doubted the differences would be resolved before the Arab ministers travelled to Vienna next week.

Iraq, which has refused to be bound by its OPEC-fixed production ceiling, also took part in the talks, the sources said. Iraq has demanded a production quota equal to that of its Gulf war enemy, Iran.

Meanwhile, Kuwaiti Oil Minister, Sheikh Ali Khalifa Al Sabah arrived in Vienna yesterday to attend the OPEC ministerial conference opening tomorrow.

Sheikh Ali was the second OPEC oil minister to fly in. Venezuelan Minister of Energy and Mines Dr Arturo Hernandez Grisanti arrived on Wednesday.

Other ministers are expected to arrive from today.

In Vienna, OPEC President Rikman said today that if the oil organisation members abided by existing production quotas there was no need for ministers to make output cuts at a biannual meeting opening here tomorrow.

The meeting will set Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries' output for the rest of 1988 in a bid to defend the group's $18 a barrel target price on world markets. Prices at present are languishing about one dollar below the level in an oversupplied world market.

Respect Lukman, who is also Nigeria's Oil Minister, told Reuters in an interview: "There is no reason why we can't have $18 if we respect our quotas."

"If I have to cut, we will cut, but I don't think we will have to cut to get $18 if all countries respect their quotas," he said.

For consumers, a compromise that simply rolled over the existing accord would probably keep pump prices about where they are now in the coming months, analysts said.

What OPEC has now is a December, 1986, accord which assigns output quotas to 12 of its 13 members — Iraq has excluded itself — within an overall ceiling of 15.06 million barrels per day (BPD).

Founder-member Iraq's refusal to participate in output restraint, because OPEC has failed to give it a quota as big as its Gulf war foe Iran, is an issue which has taken on new urgency, delegates said.

Venezuela, Indonesia and Nigeria planned to hold consultative talks today ahead of tomorrow's conference to try to establish common ground in the group, which is divided on how much oil to pump amid differing views on world demand.

The three states are regarded as a moderate bloc in the organisation — split for a decade between members which need cash now and others which fear high prices might stymie the West into conservation and alternative energy.

Lukman said: "I believe the argument will be that the market condition could support a high level of production. To that extent some people may try to insist on higher production."

Kuwait won't buy more BP shares during inquiry

LONDON, June 10, (Reuters): The Kuwait Investment Office (KIO) has agreed not to increase its 22-per-cent stake in oil giant British Petroleum Co PLC (BP) pending a British government inquiry into its holding, the government said here yesterday.

KIO, investment arm of the Kuwait government which places the Gulf state's petrodollars worldwide, also said it would not seek any seats on BP's board until Britain's Monopolies and Mergers Commission had completed its investigation.

Holding

In March, KIO said it would not raise its holding in BP, the world's third largest oil company, above 22.5 per cent and would not seek a place on the BP board. But last month, Britain referred the matter to the commission out of concern that an OPEC member state had bought into a major oil company.

"The implications of BP coming under the influence or control of a government with substantial oil interests and which is a member of OPEC raises questions of public interest," Lord Young, Britain's secretary of trade and industry, said when he referred the case to the commission on May 3.

The government asked for a report within four months.

Yesterday, the British government said KIO also agreed it would not buy any BP assets during the inquiry, except in the ordinary course of business.

US March foreign trade deficit surges

WASHINGTON, June 10, (AP): The US merchandise foreign trade deficit for March was $11.9 billion on a seasonally adjusted basis, a sharp 22 per cent higher than previously reported, the government said yesterday.

The Commerce Department released new trade figures which for the first time in two years adjusted the monthly numbers for normal seasonal changes in shipping patterns.

Best showing

A month ago, the government had reported that the trade deficit had fallen to $9.7 billion, its best showing in three years.

However, analysts cautioned at the time that trade figures often improve in March because it is a good month for US export sales.

originally been reported $13.8 billion was raised to $14.4 billion.

The January deficit, originally reported as $12.4 billion was lowered by the seasonal adjustment to $11.3 billion.

The April trade deficit is scheduled to be reported next Tuesday and it will be reported on a seasonally adjusted basis although the government will continue to release the unadjusted figures as well.

Government statisticians hope that by seasonally adjusting the trade figures they will be able to smooth out some of the volatility that has often roiled financial markets around the world.

The US trade deficit has become the most closely watched government statistics, especially on foreign exchange markets. A bad trade figure can trigger a wave of dollar selling that then depresses stock prices as investors become worried about US economic prospects.

Despite the revised figures, White House spokesman Martin Fitzwater said the data still showed a favourable downward trend in the US deficit.

"The trade deficit is on a downward trend, exports are increasing and it's a very encouraging picture in terms of the foreign trade deficit," he said.

Revised

Commerce Undersecretary Robert Ortner, who briefed reporters on the historical revisions, said the trade deficit for the first three months of this year is running at an annual rate of $150 billion, which if it holds for the entire year, would be a substantial improvement from the record $170.3-billion deficit recorded in 1987.

The figure was revised slightly downward from a previously reported $171.2 billion deficit, but this change did not reflect seasonal adjustments but rather the inclusion of previously unreported export sales.

Before 1986, the government had always adjusted the monthly import and export figures to smooth out seasonal shipping patterns, just as it adjusts most of its other statistical reports. However, it was forced to abandon the practice for a time when a tide of imports overwhelmed the ability of the customs service to process the trade information on a timely basis.

Meanwhile, the government said yesterday American businesses enjoying a boom in export sales plan to modernise and expand at the fastest rate in four years.

Reagan wins Senate fight on trade bill veto

WASHINGTON, June 10, (AP): President Ronald Reagan telephoned Democratic and Republican congressional leaders yesterday to urge prompt action on a new trade bill to strengthen America's position in the global marketplace.

The Senate fell five votes short on Wednesday of the two-thirds majority required to make the trade measure law despite Reagan's objections.

Expressed

"The will of the Senate was expressed yesterday in sustaining the President's veto, and we are proceeding to work with the leadership in developing a new bill," White House spokesman Martin Fitzwater said.

"President Reagan is calling a number of members yesterday to urge them to proceed as rapidly as possible on a new bill and I think we will be able to show some movement very soon," Fitzwater said yesterday.

The spokesman declined to identify the members the President called but said they were "the leaders who have been involved in the development of this trade bill over a long period of time" and included both Democrats and Republicans.

Finance Committee Chairman Lloyd Bentsen, a Democrat, said he is willing to draft a new trade measure that Reagan might be willing to sign, but he acknowledged that "it's a little late in the day to be talking about a second bill."

Tack

Senate majority leader Robert Byrd, also a Democrat, took another tack. Although he strongly supported the trade bill, at the last minute he voted against it — a parliamentary manoeuvre that could later allow him to ask for reconsideration of the 1,000-page bill.

"This is insurance that the American people can still have a trade bill this year," said Byrd, who argued that efforts to draft a new measure could become hopelessly bogged down in debate over complex amendments.

Fitzwater said Byrd's action "does complicate it and we certainly are discouraged that he would try to do that. It is certainly clear that the President wants a trade bill; the Republicans want a trade bill; the Democrats, most of them, want a trade bill; and we would like to see it proceed as quickly as possible."

The centrepiece provisions of the bill Reagan vetoed would revamp the government's system for imposing import curbs to aid US industries and retaliate against trade violations.

Others range from sizeable farm export subsidies to repeal of the 1980 windfall profits tax on oil-industry earnings.

But those were overshadowed in recent weeks by Reagan's objections to a provision to require companies with 100 employees or more to provide 60-day notice of plant closings and large-scale layoffs.

Republican critics objected to what they called special-interest provisions and lingering protectionism in the bill, while supporters in both parties claimed it was vital to farmers and heavy industries suffering from trade upheavals.

The House of Representatives voted overwhelmingly to override the veto last month, and some of the Republican administration's supporters have said they would feel more comfortable if they could get a second crack at the issue before having to face the voters in the November elections. Democrats made no effort to disguise their belief that the trade issue can be translated into a campaign.

Campaign

"We may lose the battle but this is no longer an issue between the Congress and the White House. It is now a presidential campaign issue."

The Democratic presidential nominee-to-be, Michael Dukakis, has supported the plant-closing provision and opposed Reagan's veto. Republican George Bush has sided with Reagan.

Kuwait calls for investment co-operation

WASHINGTON, June 10, (OPECNA): ... all has been made for the promotion of investment among developing countries as part of South-South co-operation.

Dr Fahed Al Rashed of Kuwait, speaking on behalf of Egypt, Jordan, Tunisia and Pakistan at the inaugural meeting of the World Bank-sponsored Multilateral Investment Agency (MIGA), expressed the hope that MIGA would establish close co-operation with the inter-Arab investment corporation set up by Arab states in 1975.

He said once the benefits of MIGA were demonstrated, countries which were still 'hesitant' would surely want to join the agency so that its scope and impact could be increased.

Kuwait is one of the 68 signatories to the convention which established MIGA in 1985. Forty-one of the states, including Kuwait, have formally ratified the convention.

Al Rashed drew the attention of member countries to "the attractive opportunities and incentives for foreign investment" available in the five countries he was speaking for.

He said MIGA was set up to meet the developing countries' need for larger inflows of productive foreign investment.

Cancel part of Third World debt, urges Mitterrand

PARIS, June 10, (Reuters): President Francois Mitterrand called on industrial nations on Wednesday to cancel one-third of the debt of poor countries and said France would go ahead with the cuts whatever the reaction to his proposals.

The response from other industrial powers was immediate.

In an apparently coordinated move, the Bonn government simultaneously announced its own debt forgiveness plan.

Write off

A spokesman said West Germany would write off 86 million marks ($50 million) of debt owed by five African nations and was considering forgiving 2.2 billion marks ($1.27 billion) more.

In London, British Chancellor Nigel Lawson welcomed the French plans, which he said were a variant of earlier proposals he had made and had been endorsed by the United States.

In Ottawa, Canadian officials said they would be looking for endorsement of a similar scheme at this month's Toronto economic summit.

In Paris, spokesman Jacques Attali said Mitterrand had already sent a letter to the Group of Seven (G-7) nations due to meet on June 19-21 in Toronto to detail his proposals.

In it, Mitterrand said: "We cannot any longer allow a situation to exist where financial transfers from the South to the North exceed by almost $30 billion transfers in the opposite direction — with the weight of repayments weighing on fresh credits."

Urgent

"Never has it been as urgent and as necessary to act to help the countries of the Third World, with the gap not ceasing to widen between rich nations and poor nations."

Mitterrand, just one month into a second presidential term, has long championed sub-Saharan nations, some of them former French colonies, and drawn attention to their plight.

He said the poorest nations had been hit hard by the fall in raw material prices, while facing problems such as famine and epidemics. Extreme poverty was growing in Africa, Latin America and many parts of Asia.

The most recent World Bank figures show that at the end of 1985, sub-Saharan Africa had debts of $63 billion, while the most highly indebted nations, many of them in Latin America, owed the developed world $304 billion.

About five per cent of their entire yearly economic output of goods and services went on interest payments.

Under Mitterrand's plan, impoverished nations would have three options to alleviate debt burdens.

They could opt to have G-7 nations — the United States, Japan, Britain, West Germany, France, Canada and Italy — cancel one-third of the total principal amounts borrowed and reschedule the remainder over about 10 years.

Alternatively, they could ask for rescheduling of the total at current market interest rates, extending the repayment time to 25 years from the current maximum of 20.

Rescheduling

Or they could choose rescheduling at a preferential interest rate, less than half of the rates currently charged, and repay over a period of 15 years.

The debt forgiveness would cover loans owed to governments or commercial loans guaranteed by government agencies.

Mitterrand said more imagination should be brought to bear on the global debt problem.

In particular, commercial banks should be encouraged to use new financial instruments to lessen the debt burden.

World Business Summary

S. Korea's dependence on oil increases

SEOUL, June 10, (OPECNA): South Korea's dependence on oil will reach 50.2 per cent in 1991 against an earlier projection of a 46.0 per cent growth, according to the latest figures released by the Ministry of Energy and Resources. A revision of the ministry's sixth five-year plan raised the projection for the country's total energy demand for 1991 to 84.36 million tons of oil equivalent (TOE) from the original estimate of 79.10 million (TOE). The growth rate of the annual average total energy demand between 1987 and 1991 is now set at 6.7 per cent, an increase from the original projection of 5.1 per cent. The ministry also projected that the country's final energy demand, excluding losses during power generation, would reach 67.60 million TOE in 1991, up from the originally estimated level of 64.08 million TOE.

During the 1987-91 period the annual average growth rate of energy demand per capita will reach 5.4 per cent, compared to an earlier projection of 3.8 per cent. The revised plan was to be discussed yesterday at the Korean Energy Economic Institute. According to a spokesman at the ministry, plans were on hand to import crude from China and the Soviet Union in a bid to diversify the country's energy sources.

Colombia's oil pipeline under repair after attack

BOGOTA, Colombia, June 10, (AP): Colombia's biggest oil pipeline, under repair after a series of leftist guerrilla attacks, will return to service today, the state oil company Ecopetrol said yesterday. On July 30, Ecopetrol had to shut down the pipeline because leftist guerrillas had blown it up in five places, company president Francisco Jose Chona said yesterday. The pipeline carries oil from the country's biggest oil field, at Cano Limon, in the state of Arauca along the Venezuelan border in northeast Colombia.

The 500 mile (800 km) long pipeline goes to Puerto Coveñas, a port on Colombia's Caribbean coast. The field is operated jointly by Occidental Petroleum Co., Royal Dutch Shell and Ecopetrol. The field is capable of producing about 300,000 barrels of oil a day, and the pipeline can handle 250,000 barrels a day. Ecopetrol limits pumping from Cano Limon to 215,000 barrels a day.

London Stock Market Report

U.K. SHARES MIXED IN MODEST AFTERNOON BUSINESS. LONDON, JUNE 10, REUTER - SHARES WERE MIXED BUT WITH A MARGINALLY FIRMER BIAS IN MODEST LATE AFTERNOON BUSINESS AFTER A MOSTLY DULL SESSION. DEALERS SAID.

AT 1455 GMT THE FTSE 100 SHARE INDEX WAS UP 3.3 POINTS TO 1,468.2 AFTER TRAVELLING IN A TIGHT RANGE BETWEEN 1,438.8 AND 1,464.1 POINTS DURING THE DAY.

LONDON, REFLECTING WALL STREET'S OVERNIGHT DOWNTURN, REMAINED MOSTLY FLAT UNTIL THE SELECTIVELY FIRMER OPENING ON THE NEW YORK MARKET TODAY. HALF YEARLY FORECASTS FROM THE ORGANISATION FOR ECONOMIC CO-OPERATION AND DEVELOPMENT (OECD) RELEASED OVERNIGHT HAD LITTLE DIRECT IMPACT, DEALERS SAID.

ALTHOUGH THE OECD INCREASED ITS PREDICTIONS FOR U.K. GROSS DOMESTIC PRODUCT GROWTH, THE ORGANISATION SAID STRONGER THAN EXPECTED RETAIL SPENDING AND A SURGE IN RAW MATERIALS PRICES HAVE INCREASED THE RISK OF INFLATION IN INDUSTRIAL NATIONS.

"PART FROM ONE OR TWO SPECIAL SITUATIONS THERE REALLY HASN'T BEEN A FOCUS TODAY," ONE DEALER SAID. THE OECD COMMENTS ON INFLATION MERELY UNDERLINE WORRIES THE MARKET HAS HAD FOR A WHILE ABOUT RISING COMMODITY PRICES AND CREDIT GROWTH, HE ADDED.

INSURANCES WERE A FEATURE ON SPECULATION OF POSSIBLE BIDS AHEAD OF 1992 WHEN EUROPE BECOMES A UNIFIED MARKET. SUN ALLIANCE SPURTED AHEAD 36p TO 972 AND GENERAL ACCIDENT ROSE 30p TO 949.

London Gold

LONDON, JUNE 10, REUTER - GOLD BULLION CLOSED STEADY, BUT NEAR THE DAY'S LOWS AT 456.00/456.50 DLRs AN OUNCE. THIS WAS UP FROM THE PREVIOUS CLOSE OF 455.00/455.50 DLRs, BUT BELOW THE SESSION HIGH OF 458.25/458.75 AND THE AFTERNOON QUIT OF 457.60.

PROFESSIONAL INTEREST DOMINATED TODAY'S RELATIVELY QUIET SESSION, WITH EARLY BUYING HELPING THE METAL RECOVER GROUND LOST EARLIER THIS WEEK, DEALERS SAID.

THE O.S. PCT RISE IN U.S. MAY PRODUCER PRICES WAS AS EXPECTED AND HAD LITTLE IMPACT ON PRECIOUS METALS. COMEX GOLD OPENED HIGHER BUT GAINS WERE NOT SUSTAINED. DEALERS SAID CHARTS REMAIN CONSTRUCTIVE FOLLOWING THE BREAK ABOVE 460 DLRs LAST WEEK.

London Money Market

LONDON, JUNE 10, REUTER - MONEY MARKET INTEREST RATES WERE VIRTUALLY UNCHANGED IN BECALMED TRADING TOWARDS THE CLOSE AS STERLING REMAINED INACTIVE AROUND 3.12 MARKS.

RATES ARE CLOSELY SHADOWING STERLING AT THE MOMENT BUT THE CURRENCY MARKET IS MORIBUND AHEAD OF TUESDAY'S U.S. TRADE DATA AND LITTLE IS EXPECTED TO HAPPEN BEFORE THEN, DEALERS SAID.

THE POUND'S FORTUNES ARE GOING TO REMAIN CENTRE STAGE FOR THE NEAR FUTURE, THEY ADDED. "I STILL THINK THE GOVERNMENT WANTS RATES HIGHER, AS SOON AS STERLING GIVES THEN THE OPPORTUNITY THEY'LL JUMP IN WITH ANOTHER 1/2 POINT RISE," ONE SAID. "ON THE OTHER HAND IT'LL HAVE TO REALLY PUSH NORTH TO TRIGGER A CUT."

Gold prices higher

Dollar slips on US trade and interest rate worries

LONDON, June 10, (Reuters): Worries that the US trade deficit is rising and that American interest rates may fall depressed the dollar and weighed on share prices around the world today, dealers said.

Gold rose. Dealers said that despite a slight drop in oil prices, they still fear inflation may be on the rise, especially as hot, dry weather in the North American grain belt threatens this year's harvest.

"I don't think the market's quite comfortable," a Tokyo currency dealer said.

The dollar slipped half a penny to 1.7175 West German marks and shed half a yen to 124.80 yen. It lost 0.75 cents to trade around $1.82 to the British pound sterling.

The price of gold was fixed in London at $457.10 an ounce, up $1.65 from yesterday afternoon's rate.

Worries that the US trade deficit may rise when the latest data for April are reported next week weighed on financial markets, dealers said.

"I think the market's already bracing for a slightly higher number," said Reijer Groenewold, vice president of Bank of America's Tokyo branch.

Currency dealers worry that Americans are still speeding more dollars on imports than the rest of the world wants to hold and that the value of the dollar will slide as a result.

Investors worry that a cheap dollar will price European and Japanese exports off of key foreign markets.

Last month, the dollar jumped when the United States reported a sharp drop in its March trade deficit, to $9.75 billion. On Wednesday, the figure was revised to $11.95 billion, take account of seasonal factors.

But economists warned then, and worry now, that a declining trade deficit may be a signal of strong economic growth — strong enough to risk rekindling inflation.

Their worries deepened as dry weather in the US Midwest and Canadian Prairie provinces started forcing grain prices up to their highest levels in years.

Oil prices eased, however.

With some traders betting that OPEC will not be able to prop up prices by agreeing production cuts when oil ministers meet in Vienna, beginning this weekend.

Meanwhile, traders who had thought the US would be forced to raise interest rates to cool inflation were unsettled when Beryl Sprikel, chairman of President Reagan's Council of Economic Advisors, said he expects US interest rates to fall.

That would make keeping funds in dollar-denominated bank accounts and bonds less attractive and could weaken the dollar.

And the chance the dollar could go lower helped send Frankfurt's 30-share Boersen-Zeitung index down 2.67 points to 306.49. Paris shares eased and the All Share Swiss index dropped five points to 844.7.

The Australian All-Ordinaries index slipped 3.7 points to 1,586.7, but Hong Kong's Hang Seng index closed 6.59 points higher at 2,647.42.

Share prices on the London Stock Exchange rose for a second day today, led higher late in the day by a firm start on Wall Street. The FTSE 100-share index finished 8.3 points, or 0.45 per cent, higher at 1849.8.

The Dow Jones industrial average was up 12.27 points at 2105.62 at the close of London trading.

Several dealers said equities were encouraged by the 1230-GMT announcement that the US Producer Price Index (PPI) for May rose a modest 0.5 per cent, slightly higher than April's 0.4 per cent gain and in line with most market expectations.

"The market reacted very well to some potentially bad news in the PPI, which is a clear change of sentiment from the recent past of taking good news and turning it around," said one UK analyst.

"People's estimates of PPI had been creeping up over the past couple of days, so over time, it wasn't unanticipated," said Bob Semple, an equities strategist at county Natwest Woodmac Ltd.

Several dealers said encouraging signs that Wall Street did not lose the gains chalked up over the past week. "People have been loathe recently to take big positions but we're seeing a bit more interest after this week's successful period of consolidation," one analyst said.

"There was some trepidation that Wall Street would erase on Wednesday's 50-point rise yesterday, and when that didn't happen, we all breathed a sigh of relief," he noted.

The Financial Times index of 30 industrials closed at 1468.2, up 4.5.

The Financial Times "500" share index was 1041.18 up 3.38.

In Japan, Tokyo share prices closed down in heavy trade today marked by fears of currency instability and a retreat on Wall Street, brokers said.

A shortened trading day and profit-taking also dampened market optimism, they said.

The key Tokyo share index closed 151.66 points — 0.53 per cent — lower at 27,920.36. Volume was 2.2 billion shares against a near-record 2.6 billion yesterday.

Robert Karr of New Japan Securities cited exchange rate fluctuations as a cause for stock market concern.

Saudi interest rates surge

KD deposits ease in liquid market

KUWAITI dinar deposits eased in a moderately active Thursday market flush with liquidity after a KD 90 million issue of Treasury bills matured.

Dealers said the market may have underestimated the amount of funds flowing back into the system from the maturing bills on Wednesday which appear to have been held mostly by banks and not, as thought, by the Central Bank.

A new KD100 million issue, also on Wednesday, subsequently failed to have much impact on liquidity and the market is now expecting a further offering next week. The Central Bank would normally announce a new Treasury bill tender on a Saturday.

Short-dated funds continued to be well offered at nominal rates, with overnight quoted at 1/2 per cent and spot-negotiated in a range of one to 1/2 per cent.

Most trade centred on the one-month maturity which fell during the morning to end at six, 5/32 per cent from an early 6-1/2, six and Wednesday's deals mostly recorded at 6-1/8.

Three-months eased 1/8 point to 6-1/4, six, while six-months were barely traded at a steady 6-1/2, 1/8 per cent.

The Central Bank's dinar exchange rate was a shade easier at 0.27570/80 to the dollar after 0.27548/58 on Wednesday, while commercial banks quoted 0.27575/85.

It was first announced by King Fahd at the turn of the year as a way of financing a projected 35.9-billion-riyal ($9.6-billion) 1988 budget deficit and taking the strain off dwindling foreign reserves at a time of weak oil revenue.

But the next months yielded little news, sparking rumours that conservative religious opposition to the Western concept of interest-bearing securities had killed the scheme.

However, the chairman of the kingdom's commercial banks were summoned to the Saudi Arabian Monetary Agency (SAMA) — the central bank — earlier this week and briefed on a first offering which will be launched on Saturday or in a week's time.

As a result, interest rates surged in Thursday's deposit market, with one-month funds briefly hitting 8-1/2 per cent or the highest level since the beginning of 1987.

"It was very hectic... it seems the bonds issue is at last going ahead," said one trader in Saudi Arabia.

Meanwhile, in Bahrain, Saudi interest rates surged on Thursday to hit their highest level in 18 months as the cash-short Riyadh government prepared to launch its first major borrowing from banks in 25 years.

Traders said Saudi Arabia was now poised to offer kingdom banks one to three billion riyals ($265 to $400 million) of government bonds as early as Saturday in the first of a series of issues designed to fund a persistent budget deficit.

News of the offering, leaked on Wednesday, drove interest rates higher as banks scrambled to borrow funds in anticipation of a liquidity squeeze when the bonds are launched.

"It was very hectic... it seems the bonds issue is at last going ahead," said one trader in Saudi Arabia.

World oil prices weaken ahead of OPEC meeting

LONDON, June 10, (Reuters): Crude oil prices lost 20-35 cents per barrel on world spot markets today, the eve of the biannual meeting of the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) in Vienna.

The latest drift downward started late yesterday in the US when crude oil on the Nymex, the main US futures exchange, breached technical support levels.

After a short-lived recovery early in the European morning, prices fell a further 20-25 cents per barrel this afternoon, as bearish sentiment re-emerged amid doubts that OPEC will reach an accord to shore up flagging oil prices.

West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark US crude, fell to below $17 per barrel for July, the lowest price in spot crude oil futures since April 8.

"Nothing will come out of the OPEC meeting, and there is a lot of crude oil around," said one US trader.

In an interview with Reuters shortly after he arrived in Vienna, OPEC president and Nigerian Oil Minister Rilwanu Lukman said that OPEC members are currently producing at 18.2 million barrels per day, well over their official levels.

But Lukman said that provided OPEC members respected their output quotas, it would be possible to attain the OPEC target price of $18 per barrel. "If we have to cut we will cut, but I don't think we will have to cut to get $18 if all countries respect their quotas," he said.

The oil ministers of Nigeria, Venezuela and Indonesia, widely regarded as moderates within the 13-member group, were set to meet today to discuss common stands on problems facing the conference, OPEC delegates said.

Gulf Air more than doubled losses last year

BAHRAIN, June 10, (Reuters): Gulf Air, a leading Middle East airline that slid into the red in 1986, said today it more than doubled its losses last year but would still expand its fleet of aircraft.

A company statement said it lost BD2.8 million ($7.4 million) in 1987 but would push ahead with plans to lease two Boeing 767s in addition to six already in its fleet.

Gulf Air, owned by Bahrain, Qatar, Oman and the emirate of Abu Dhabi, was hard hit by Middle East recession and tough competition and lost BD1.3 million ($3.5 million) in 1986.

Revenues fell last year by 9.2 per cent to BD190 million ($504 million) from BD209.3 million ($555 million). In 1985, it net profit was BD13.7 million ($36.3 million).

Khanpuri clarifies

NRI Investors Forum chairman C.S.S. Khanpuri has clarified that the commemorative shield, which was given to the NRI of the Year 1988, has been sponsored by the Forum.

The shield, and a trophy, were last week presented to the Indian Arts Circle chairman M. Mathews by the Forum.

Khanpuri, in his citation, said Mathews has done a tremendous service to the Indian community by putting it on a sound and respectable setting.

Khanpuri said the criterion of this award is based on the degree of efforts and achievements of a non-resident Indian for the welfare of the community as a whole, irrespective of any regional or communal considerations.

US wholesale price rose in May

WASHINGTON, June 10, (Reuters): Prices at the wholesale level in the United States rose 0.5 per cent in May after a 0.4 per cent increase in April, the government said today.

The increase in the Labour Department's producer price index provided further evidence that inflation was accelerating but not so rapidly that the Federal Reserve, the US central bank, would be forced to raise interest rates sharply in the immediate future, economists said.

The rise, which was led by higher prices for food, was in line with Wall Street forecasts.

The index for finished goods also rose in line with expectations if the volatile components of food and energy were eliminated to get a better picture of the underlying trend.

On this basis, wholesale prices rose 0.3 per cent last month after a 0.1 per cent increase in April.

So far this year, producer prices have risen at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 3.4 per cent compared with a 2.0 per cent pace in the 12 months ended last month.

But the report showed that higher prices could be in the pipeline. Prices of goods at the intermediate stage of processing rose 0.6 per cent in May after a 0.8 per cent April rise and were 5.3 per cent higher than a year earlier.

Economists said the higher costs would be reflected later in the producer price index for finished goods and, ultimately, in the price people pay in the shops.

Consumer food prices increased accelerated in May to 0.9 per cent after a 0.4 per cent increase in April, the Labour Department said.

Prices for eggs and fish rebounded sharply after falling in April, while increases accelerated for pork, processed chickens, bakery products and vegetables.

Lay ahead

Although food costs were only 0.6 per cent higher than a year ago, thanks to declines in some earlier months, economists said big monthly increases probably lay ahead because unusually dry weather in the Midwest had sent the price of corn, soybeans and other commodities soaring recently. Crude goods prices also rose a strong 1.2 per cent in May after a 1.3 per cent increase in April, although they remained just 2.4 per cent higher than a year earlier.

The warning signs of inflation in the producer price index come on top of evidence in other government reports that wage increases were accelerating too.

The Federal Reserve has nudged up short-term interest rates in recent weeks to nip inflationary pressures in the bud, but economists said the central bank was anxious not to clamp down too hard for fear of unsettling financial markets and halting the country's economic expansion, now in its 67th month.

Finished energy goods prices rose only 0.2 per cent in May, after a 3.1 per cent increase in April, as natural gas prices tumbled 3.8 per cent following a 4.3 per cent gain in April, the Labour Department said.

But energy prices remained 0.2 per cent below their year-earlier level, and petrol prices rose 3.8 per cent in May after a 0.7 per cent April rise.

Western economies performing well: OECD

PARIS, June 10, (Reuters): Western economies have performed much better than forecast since last year's stock market crash, but a risk of inflation is resurfacing, the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) said today.

The current economic situation is better than expected six months ago... this relatively good news, however, should not be seen as ground for complacency," the 24-nation economic forum warned in its half-yearly review.

David Henderson, head of the Paris-based OECD's economics department, told reporters yesterday that major worries included "chronically high rates of unemployment in a number of countries, the risk of an acceleration of inflation in some, and the slow reduction of current account imbalances."

The OECD said the gulf between the huge US trade deficit and surpluses in West Germany and Japan had begun to narrow but remained a destabilising factor in the world economy, while unemployment was particularly problematic in France, the OECD said.

Lawson also voiced concern over strong US activity in his remarks here last month, provoking the blunt response from US Treasury Secretary

James Baker that he did not view high domestic demand as an inflationary risk.

The OECD's Henderson said yesterday the chief danger of accelerating US inflation would be if the dollar fell further or growth accelerated, with a corresponding fall in joblessness.

The OECD said that, while high demand could cause difficulties for the US economy, the problem facing Europe was one of high and rising unemployment and weakening activity.

It said that preconditions were in place in Europe for a better economic performance, citing low inflation in many countries, wage moderation, improved profitability and greater willingness to adapt on the part of both workers and firms.

"Yet for many European countries the outlook is still for sluggish growth of output, investment and employment," it said.

Henderson said that the West German growth was running faster than expected, but due to higher export growth rather than policy initiatives by the government.

"It would be nice if domestic demand growth in Germany were faster than we expect it to be," he added.

The OECD is forecasting 2.75 per cent West German domestic demand growth this year, slipping to 2.25 per cent in 1989.

In contrast the OECD report welcomed recent strong economic growth in Japan, led by buoyant domestic demand and rapidly rising imports, but said this trend needed to be sustained.

"Industry has been adjusting rapidly to changing conditions, imports have been rising strongly and the current account surplus has narrowed... it is important that this process continues — and be nurtured as necessary by policies — over the medium term," the report said.

It renewed calls for the US to reduce its budget and current account deficits, and said US monetary policy might have to respond in the near term to inflationary pressures.

Economic growth throughout the OECD area is forecast to fall slowly to three per cent this year and 2.5 per cent in 1989 from 3.1 per cent in 1987, matching a decline to real total domestic demand to 2.5 per cent in 1989 from 3.4 per cent last year.

Mubarak signs new Islamic investment law

CAIRO, June 10, (Reuters): Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, has signed a new law to control the multi-billion-dollar business of Islamic investment companies.

He approved the law yesterday, less than 48 hours after its passage by parliament, the national Middle East News Agency (MENA) reported.

The government said the law, which will force private Islamic firms to go public and subject them to scrutiny by a state regulatory agency, was not hostile to the companies.

Owners have protested at the legislation saying it could threaten their investments. They deny charges of mismanagement.

The move followed official concern over the growing economic power of the firms, which control the savings of hundreds of thousands of mostly low-income depositors.

Instead of fixed interest, which is banned by Islam, the Islamic companies offer a risk-sharing scheme that paid over 20 per cent a year compared to about 13 per cent by banks.

Banks feared the companies paid larger dividends than they could afford and warned of a possible political and economic crisis if the system collapsed. Owners of four of the largest companies cancelled a mass rally of depositors scheduled for Sunday. One senior company official, who asked not to be named, said they were concerned it would turn into an anti-government riot.

"It is no secret that the government was subjected to a prolonged and fierce war of nerves designed to scare it away from handling the explosive issue..." wrote editor Said Sonbol in the best-selling daily Al-Akhbar.

"It must be hoped the government will succeed in enforcing the legislation, a task which is actually uphill."

The law gives company owners three months to declare whether they plan to stay in business or liquidate. Those continuing must apply for permits to turn themselves into public companies subject to an array of new rules.

An appendix to the law detailing how it is to be implemented is still being drafted.

"The government basically gave itself total power to do whatever it wants with these companies," said a Western economist who studied the law. "But it remains to be seen how the regulations will be applied."

The second successive day on heavy selling triggered by fears of harsh measures against excessive speculation. Associated Cement fell 22 rupees to 222.5 and Tata Steel 14 to 862.5.

Shares recovered from a poor start but still ended down yesterday's close. The Commerzbank index, set at mid-session, fell 12.1 to 1,417.7.

PARIS: Prices ended the last session before Sunday's second-round parliamentary elections narrowly firmer in quiet trading.

ZURICH: Shares were little changed with a slightly lower bias, although banks were a fraction higher. The All-Share Swiss index was down 1.9 at 847.9.

LONDON: Prices were mixed with a marginally firmer bias after a dull session. By 1455 GMT the FTSE 100 index was up 3.3 at 1,846.1.

NEW YORK: Stocks pulled back in morning trading after brief early gains. Brokers blamed profit-taking and a continuing rise in commodities futures contract prices. The Dow was up three at 2,096.

Group of Seven keen to tackle debt crisis

TORONTO, June 10, (Reuters): The seven major non-Communist industrial countries open their annual economic summit here next week with leaders keen to tackle the debt crisis but wary of upsetting a delicate balance in world financial markets.

Delegations from Britain, Canada, France, Italy, Japan, the United States and West Germany will meet from June 19 to 21 to debate problems ranging from trade imbalances to farm subsidies.

But with concern over last October's stock market crash receding in the face of robust world growth, senior government officials in a Reuters survey saw a need to ride out the rest of the storm while presenting a harmonious front to the world.

Confidence "The bottom line for the summit will be the question of the confidence of the markets," said a senior Canadian official who asked not to be identified.

Assistant US Treasury Secretary David Mulford said a goal of the meeting, which will be held in a glass-fronted convention centre near Lake Ontario, would be continued global economic expansion and maintenance of an open world trading system.

"I expect, therefore, that much of the discussion will centre on the coordination of economic policies by the major countries," Mulford said in a recent speech.

This will be President Ronald Reagan's last economic summit before he leaves office, and seems likely to be an anti-climax for him following his dramatic Moscow summit with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev earlier this month.

US officials have played down the chances of major new initiatives, saying it was important not to rock the boat ahead of the US presidential election in November. Reagan's Vice-President, George Bush, the Republican candidate, could suffer political damage if the US economy turned sour before then.

Besides, the officials said, current policies were working, with signs of healthy growth worldwide, improvement in the US trade deficit and a reduction in Japan's trade surplus.

Success in stabilising exchange rates has encouraged Washington to propose two enhancements to the policy cooperation begun in 1985: closer coordination of structural changes such as tax reform, and monitoring zones for key economic variables such as trade balances and growth rates.

Endorsement US officials do not expect unqualified endorsement of the monitoring zone idea from their summit partners. Britain and West Germany fear it would encroach on their independence.

Japanese officials said their policy of promoting domestic demand to spur growth was helping to rectify trade imbalances and this would help to preserve unity at the summit, the first for Japanese Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita.

"We don't expect Japan to be under any harsh criticism about its trade surplus from the others this time," a Japanese Foreign Ministry official told Reuters in Tokyo.

It does appear that a new consensus is emerging to resolve a major part of the Third World debt problem.

French President Francois Mitterrand this week asked other summit countries of the so-called Group of Seven to follow his lead in cancelling one-third of the debt owed to them by the world's poorest countries, in sub-Saharan Africa.

"Never has it been as urgent and as necessary to act to help the countries of the Third World..." Mitterrand, beginning a second seven-year term, said in a letter to other G-7 leaders.

West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl is expected to be sympathetic to the plan. Bonn has announced its own forgiveness scheme, promising to write off $50 million of African debt and considering cancelling $1.27 billion more.

British Chancellor of the Exchequer Nigel Lawson, also promoting a debt relief scheme for the poorest nations, welcomed the initiative.

Japan's trade surplus plunges in May

TOKYO, June 10, (Reuters): Japan's overall trade surplus in May plunged over 20 per cent and the surplus with the United States fell even more, sparking optimism among economists of more declines to come.

"Japan's imports are growing more rapidly than before... and we can expect even more improvement," said economist Masaru Takagi of Fuji Bank Ltd.

The government reported yesterday that Japan's overall trade surplus dropped to $5.05 billion from 6.42 billion in the same month last year, marking the 13th straight monthly fall.

"We are very pleased to see these nice figures," Takagi said. "I'm optimistic for this year and next."

Most of that drop was in the trade gap with the United States, noted Soichiro Akahane, economist at Bank of Tokyo Ltd.

Tokyo's surplus with Washington fell to $3.30 billion in May from 4.45 billion a year earlier, the fifth straight monthly decline.

Shipments of Japanese cars, which make up a huge portion of exports to the United States, fell 16 per cent in May from a year earlier as car companies have lost their price competitiveness in the American market, Akahane said.

Shipments "That will make Japan's total exports to the United States sluggish this year," Akahane added.

Exports to the United States fell 2.2 per cent to $6.80 billion, while imports surged 39.3 per cent to 3.49 billion.

However, Tokyo's surplus with the European Economic Community swelled to $1.78 billion in May from 1.52 billion.

Although imports grew 32.6 per cent to $2.06 billion shipments of Japanese goods climbed a rapid 25.9 per cent to 3.84 billion.

Japan's exports to Europe have not slackened as they have to the United States because the yen has not risen against European currencies as much as against the dollar, economists said.

Shipments of Japanese goods to all countries increased 10.2 per cent in May from a year earlier to $20.50 billion while imports advanced 26.7 per cent per cent to 15.45 billion.

Several economists see the strong rise in exports as indicating a trend which will last until the end of this year.

Although much stems from shipments abroad of capital goods — machinery and parts needed to set up new factories — as Japanese manufacturers move overseas to keep competitive, some is from development of new products, the economists said.

China and India sign protocol to boost trade

BEIJING, June 10, (AP): A trade protocol signed by China and India for 1988 sets no ceilings for the value of imports and exports in an attempt to increase bilateral trade, the Indian embassy said yesterday.

Trade volume was limited by the three previous annual trade agreements between China and India. The ceiling was placed at $200 million last year.

The mostly government-to-government trade in 1986-87 totaled about $138 million, with China enjoying a substantial surplus.

Negotiations Chinese Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Zheng Tuobin told India during their three days of negotiations in Beijing that China was willing to work on a long-range plan to reduce the trade imbalance, a statement from the embassy said.

He also expressed interest in importing such items as foodgrains and chemicals, and said the two countries should explore possibilities of technology transfers, it said.

The Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry sent a delegation to China earlier this month to look into possible technology sales to small- and medium-sized Chinese companies and other ways of boosting India's exports to China.

CINE ROUND-UP FROM BOMBAY

INDIAN films which deal mostly with the two major communities, the Hindus and Muslims, have always treated the other smaller ones with a contempt, born out of ignorance, and also perhaps due to the old habit of sticking to the formulas and stereotypes created by the Hindi screen over the years.

An easy target of this practice is the Parsi community. It is the smallest in India as well as the world, with a living population of about eighty thousand. There are fears for its extinction within the next fifty years or so, with a low birth rate and inter marriages. But the Parsis are also among the most progressive, well-educated and refined communities in India holding significant positions in various walks of life.

Shabana and Naseer in Pestonjee: make the Parsis look like lost aliens in the sub-continent.

Parsi community given short shrift on screen

Indian cinema unfair to minorities

And yet, films continue to depict them as they were in the last century. The same antique dresses of long white coats or embroidered saris, the same "pehtas" or "pagdis" on the male heads and white scarfs on the female ones are foisted on the screen characters. What is more damaging is that they are shown to be nincompoops and weaklings. The Parsi on the screen (including TV, video and ad films) is over-talkative, foolish, old-fashioned and well as quarrelsome with others and speaking a distorted form of the country's language.

Many actors have caricatured them in films before. But Amitabh crowned it all in "Shahenshah", where he briefly played a "hawaji", as the Parsis are mockingly called by other communities. Amit came fully dressed like a last-century antique and had a comic scene with Meenakshi who pretends to save him from robbers. The only saving grace was that Amit was a C.I.D. member in the guise of a Parsi and finally, was one up on the people who wanted to fool him.

It was not so in Feroze Khan's Jashn-e-Baz, where two Parsis again dressed up in antiquated clothes were ridiculed in a poor manner. When they feel threatened they run to hide behind Dimple's skirt, thus showing the community to be weak and cowardly. Feroze had done it in his "Qurbani" too. We don't know what grudge Feroze bears, since he received his earliest big breaks through the Parsi Wadia brothers in Reporter Raja and Char Darvesh. Is he just following the trend or nursing some grievance from the past?

Earlier on as well many commercial and even some art films have been involved in this mischief. But now a full-fledged film on Parsi life has been made by Vijaya Mehta, with the patronage of the state-owned N.F.D.C. Based on a story that lacks substance or purpose, the film called "Pestonjee" does not exactly ridicule Parsis. Still, it shows them in a light that is not flattering. In a refined way, it follows the same old example of portraying them as quaint, eccentric, old-worldish, ever-complaining and cut off from the mainstream of India's language and culture.

If it is meant to be a realistic artistic film, then it should have been made in the real Gujarati dialect which Parsis actually speak. They break into Hindi only when they have to tackle others. But by making the whole film in twisted Hindi the director blames the Parsis, while also making a very unrealistic film. Surely the Parsis don't speak to one another in such a tongue. And why should they? It is extremely unnatural and it makes the whole film unbelievable. The crowning irony is that the film was given a national award as the best Hindi film of the year. A Hindi film distorting the national language Hindi and getting such honour? Apart from the language compromise, taking popular Hindi stars like Shabana Azmi, Anupam Kher, Naseeruddin Shah and Kiran Thakur Singh (Mrs Kher) is another big mistake, since they never ring true as Parsis.

All of them look artificial speaking broken Hindi, as the audience has seen them as stars of many Hindi films. Why could the director not use real Parsi artists from the stage troupes, which regularly put up dramas? In fact, a few Parsi actors are only used in small roles. Of course, much credit must go to Naseeruddin for struggling his level best to create the image of a crochety Parsi.

Pestonjee does not tackle any of the acute problems facing the minority community, like housing shortage, late marriages or girls marrying outside the community, exodus to foreign countries, disenchantment with religion and psychological reverses suffered ever since the British left India.

Instead, it wastes public money on a frivolous tale of two friends who wanted to marry the same woman. Anupam plays Pestonjee and Naseer is his pal Piroj, who can't see eye to eye with his living and loving. When Shabana comes as a maiden from Aden, put up for a match marriage, Naseer likes her but due to his indecision, Anupam's match is fixed up and he marries her. Naseer still nurses love for the two people, though he withdraws from their life and takes a transfer to a small town.

Gap After a gap, he finds that the marriage has hit the rocks. Shabana has become a childless shrew and a looney who often goes hysterical. Anupam has carelessly ruined his health and business. He has an affair with a half-Parsi merry widow (Kiran Singh), who has given him a child. Anupam soon dies of heart attack and when money runs out, it is the mistress who shows some oobility. The film gives a last quaint sermon to Naseer (and to the audience) that one should enjoy life and not just keep interfering. But when did Naseer, as the loner, do that? On the contrary those who flitted through life met a bad end.

The film which was made at a cost of 13 lakhs does not achieve any purpose. It selects a period which is thirty years old so that it can justify the Parsis looking like museum pieces. No doubt, their houses, old decoration pieces and costumes are lovingly selected and photographed. But it still makes them odd creatures, like some aliens lost in the Indian sub-continent.

Actually Parsis have merged so well in the different professions and pursuits that they are just like any other present-day Indians. But such films result in getting the minorities even more segregated from the mainstream. We have to still wait for a true film on Parsis.

RAJ KAPOOR was almost like a father to me. Fourteen years older than I, he often called me his eldest son.

My earliest recollections are of him slogging it out at Prithvi theatres. He was in charge of the entire production, would reach the theatre by six in the morning and remain there until late night.

The kind of energy he had made people wonder if Rajji had an extra generator in him. My father admired the capabilities of his eldest son, since he handled virtually everything — from production design to music to lighting.

When he started R.K. studios in 1946 after his marriage, I was roped in, as part of his first venture, Aag. It was wonderful to work with him. But there was one thing I didn't quite fancy — and that was shooting at night. But oh! Rajji knew how to extract work out of me. He'd tempt me with an extra omelette or a soft drink.

Foul

It was during this period that I picked up foul language and would often use it, while talking to my elders. One day, Rajji heard me use it with my mother, and promptly slapped me. I was taken aback.

My brother had always smothered me with affection. Moreover, I'd never been hit by either parent to that day. I shut myself upstairs and hollered. Rajji tried to console me, but when I wouldn't stop crying, he started crying himself. Ultimately, I stopped when he promised to take me out for a Chinese meal.

When he launched his second film, Awara, I got another opportunity to work with him. I played the young vagabond. One day, I went up to him and asked him why he wasn't paying me. He was taken aback.

The very next morning, he bought me a Bell and Howard 16 mm movie camera and said, "Look, you can make use of as

Brother Shashi talks about the great showman

'Raj Kapoor was my guru'

Raj Kapoor: his advice worked like magic much raw stock as possible, but you got to make a film. You got to do this, if you want to ever make a film." This is how he became my guru in the film line.

Another interesting incident took place when I wanted to get married. Jennifer and I did not have enough money to fly from Singapore to Bombay and get married in front of my parents. I wrote to him and he immediately sent me two air tickets. This was how I kept my promise to my mother and got married in her presence.

In my first film, Mohabbat Isko Kehate Hain when I learnt that I had to do a song sequence I got very nervous. I went to him and explained how nervous I was. "Why should you be nervous?" he said. "Take it easy. Do it naturally. Learn your words, move your hips, take a breath when necessary. But don't overdo it. It is better to underplay a role and look more natural. You are a Kapoor and you can do it." His advice worked like magic.

Venture

I wanted him to direct my latest venture, Ajooba, but he politely refused, saying that he wasn't keeping good health. Though I was hurt by his response, I later found that he was talking sense. Egged on by him, Amitabh and Jaya Bachchan, I decided to take up the direction myself.

I consider his dream sequence in Awara by far the best sequence he has ever produced. When I once challenged him to produce a dream sequence which could heat Awara, he promptly replied, "I'd give you a better sequence if I had with me Nargis, Shankar, Jaikishan, Shailendra and Mukesh." I had no answer. His magnificent personality leaves you speechless. This is the greatness of Raj Kapoor.

Behind the Screen

Raj Kumar cooperated with producer Pranlal Mehta during Marte Dam Tak because the actor badly wanted a good role. But now that he has gained popularity from it, he is harassing the same producer over Surya. R. Kumar demands one lakh per day (keeping up with the example set by Dharmendra) and works only for a few hours. He is even completing the much-delayed Umi's story ages ago, with his two heroines Waheed Rahman and Sadhna ooh looking like their own grandmothers.

Anil Kapoor: hates all heroes except himself

Mandakini has a Christian father and a Muslim mother. But she herself seems to be becoming a Buddhist. Recently, she called her "guru" from Nepal for some devout sermons. We can't say what religious her sister Parveen follows. But Manda does not encourage her to be a star any longer. She has started Naam-e-Hayat, her own home production with her secretary as a part-time producer. What better way than to give Parveen a break in it? But Manda has kept her out, though brother Bhanu is very much in the cast.

Suresh Oberoi says that even the government of India has recognised his talent with a national award and therefore he has got a stamp of the ISI (Indian Standard Institute), which is meant actually for consumer products. Poor Suresh does not know that it is an independent jury that decides the award and the government only announces it. Of course, the government reserves the right to reject a recommendation made by the jury. Luckily, it was not so in the case of Oberoi.

Sangeeta Bijlani is a very ambitious model and actress. In order to become a star overnight, she kept a friendship going with Vinod Khanna and Smay Dutt. Now that director N. Chandra is a big-selling name, she has become very friendly with him and has got the heroine's role in Yagadhar. Changing boy friends faster than lightning? No wonder her pet name is Bijli.

Anil Kapoor troubled the producer of "Inteqam" by not giving dubbing dates. The real reason was that the film has another hero Sunny, who has recently stolen the limelight in Paap Ki Duniya. For some time, Anil was helpful, when his brother Boney was planning to take its distribution rights. But when Boney gave up the idea, Anil became ice cold towards the film. After Anupam, Amrish and Rakesh Roshan, it is Nana Patekar's turn to shave off his head and go bald. He did it for an art film "Trishagni" but now he is planning to keep it permanently, so that he may also turn into a scary-looking villain.

CHANGES OF ADOLESCENCE CAN LEAD TO DEPRESSION

QUESTION: How do you recognise depression in a teen-aged daughter?

ANSWER: Because teen-aged girls are going through so many social, physical and emotional changes, it is hard for parents to sort the normal difficulties from those that need professional attention. Adolescence is a time of change for parents and children, so there will be times of friction, anxiety and sadness. These times do not last, however, and they are resolved by continuing communication between parent and child.

The time to be concerned is when withdrawal, self-consciousness and sadness are prolonged, and communication is limited or non-existent. Recognising that adolescence is a time of change, it is just as important to realise that it is a part of life and that most teens cope with it without withdrawing from others or suffering prolonged mood changes.

Womeo suffer more adult mood disturbances than men, and this finding is consistent throughout the world. As you might expect, the reasons for this are not agreed upon, with some feeling the differences are biological and some feeling that social circumstances cause them. Regardless of the reasons, your teen-aged daughter has a higher chance of having emotional difficulty than your teen-aged son.

If your daughter is experiencing sleep disturbances, changes in eating habits, loss of interest in her appearance and withdrawal from friends and family, she may be suffering depression. If her normal functioning is disturbed by depression, she needs attention. School and work performance will suffer, because depression zaps the energy that is required for good performance.

Talk with school counselors or your family doctor if you are concerned about your daughter. Counseling by a skilled and caring professional may be all that is needed, or your daughter may require the help of anti-depressant medications to help her over this difficult time.

QUESTION: I have a very brief question that no one seems to be able to answer for me. Why do we yawn?

ANSWER: Actually, that is a very good question. I'll be honest. There is not a tremendous amount written about the process of yawning but it certainly is something we all do, at one time or another. Now a yawn is not simply opening the mouth wide, but is usually accompanied by a deep inspiration, filling the lungs with air. That has led to a theory that yawning has something to do with the state of our lungs. As we all know the lung is filled with millions of minute air sacs where oxygen is taken out of the air transferred into the bloodstream. After sitting down for a prolonged period of time, some of the air sacs collapse. When enough of them have been affected, we yawn to re-expand them. If we search for a logical reason for everyone yawning at the same time, it might be because they are all doing the same thing, like sitting in a room with stale air, watching a show, where shallow breathing sets in. Therefore, they would all need to yawn at the same time. Of course, it also has been written that yawning can be induced by the power of suggestion, and we sort of "catch" it from the next person. Or it could just mean the show was boring and the yawn was a display of disinterest. Take your pick.

Bonds takes Pirates past Cubs

PITTSBURGH, June 10, (AP): Talk about slumps. Not only do the Pittsburgh Pirates rarely rally to win in their final at-bat, Barry Bonds was 0-for-1988 in game-winning situations. Make that 1-for-1988.

Bonds, batting just .184 with runners in scoring position, lined a two-run, two-out single last night as the Pirates scored three runs in the ninth inning to beat the Chicago Cubs 4-3.

Completing a comeback that began with doubles by Darnell Coles and Sid Bream off the Cubs' right-handed relief ace Rich Gossage, the Pirates came back to win in their final at-bat for just the fourth time since 1983.

"What did that mean to us? It meant a lot because of the way we did it," Bonds said. "What did it mean to me? It meant a lot because it showed that in that situation I can get a big hit... my job is to score runs, not drive them in, so if I drive them in it's just a bonus."

Jim Gott, 3-1, pitched 1 2-3 scoreless innings in relief of John Smiley, who allowed three runs and seven hits in seven innings in his matchup with former high school rival Jamie Moyer.

Dodgers 4, Astros 2
John Shelby extended his hitting streak to 24 games with a tiebreaking double as Los Angeles beat Houston at Dodger Stadium for a split of their four-game series. Mike Marshall hit an RBI double in the fifth inning and Shelby followed with a double that made it 3-2. Mike Scioscia added a run-scoring single off Nolan Ryan, 5-4.

Giants 6, Braves 4
Winning pitcher Mike Lacoss singled to start a four-run third inning that carried San Francisco over Atlanta. Lacoss, 5-4, won his third straight decision and Scott Garretts got his third save. Pete Smith, 1-6, lost his fifth straight decision. Dale Murphy hit a solo homer, his eighth, and a run-scoring double for the visiting Braves.

Padres 3, Reds 1
Jimmy Jones held Cincinnati to three hits for eight innings and San Diego scored three unearned runs in the third. Jones, 5-5, struck out three and walked two; Mark Davis closed with hitless relief for his eighth save.

PISTONS SHACKLED IN SECOND GAME

Lakers win to even NBA series

"Magic" Johnson (right) drives past Pistons' Rick Mahorn and is fouled while trying to score. (Reuter wirephoto)

LOS ANGELES, June 10, (Reuter): James Worthy scored 26 points to lead the fast-breaking Los Angeles Lakers to a 108-96 win over the Detroit Pistons yesterday and even the best-of-seven National Basketball Association (NBA) championship series at one game apiece.

The Lakers, shackled by the rugged Detroit defence in a shock 105-93 defeat in the opening game, took advantage of miserable first-half shooting by the Pistons to build a 10-point half-time lead of 49-39 and never trailed after that.

Outburst

Detroit fought back gamely late in the third quarter and early in the fourth, using a 17-3 scoring outburst against Los Angeles to even the game at 80-80 with just over eight minutes left.

The Lakers, however, scored nine of the next 11 points and were never again threatened. Adrian Dantley, who scored 34 points to lead Detroit to victory in game one, was limited to a team-high of 19 points.

The series now moves to Detroit for games on Sunday, Tuesday and next Thursday before returning, if necessary, for the final to Los Angeles.

For the Lakers, who avoided becoming the first team ever to lose the first two games of an NBA championship series at home, it was a must game.

"We had to win," said Lakers star Earvin "Magic" Johnson, who fought off a stomach virus to break the 20-point mark in scoring, while handing out 11 assists.

"If we did not win tonight we faced a very tough road," said coach Pat Riley, whose Lakers are trying to become the first team to win back-to-back NBA titles since the 1968-69 Boston Celtics.

Detroit, who never quite recovered after shooting a dreary 32.5 per cent from the field in the opening two quarters, seemed satisfied with earning a split in Los Angeles.

Agreed

"If we win the next three games at home, we'll be the champions," said star playmaker Isiah Thomas.

Detroit coach Chuck Daly agreed. "The ball is on our court," he said.

McLarens tipped to win GP

MONTREAL, June 10, (Reuter): The key words in the Formula One Grand Prix season so far are Prost, McLaren and turbo-charged — a combination which enters Sunday's Canadian Grand Prix with victories in three of the four races this year.

In the San Marino race he failed to win, Frenchman Alain Prost — who has won a record 31 Grand Prix races — was second, behind McLaren teammate Ayrton Senna of Brazil.

Prost, with 33 points, leads the race for the world drivers' championship. Ferrari's Gerhard Berger of Austria, second in the opening race of the season in Brazil and again in Monaco, is in second place with 18 points, three ahead of Senna.

Laps

The McLaren teammates are obvious strong favourites for Sunday's race, over 69 laps of the 4.41 km Gilles Villeneuve circuit, although Prost has never won a Grand Prix in North America. The track has been altered since the last Canadian Grand Prix in 1986 and now includes a longer straight before the left-hand, 90 degree bend.

The race, on a man-made island on the St Lawrence River, was cancelled last year because of a legal wrangle involving a sponsorship dispute between rival breweries and the Formula One Constructors' Association (FOCA), the governing body of Grand Prix racing.

Bubka breaks world record

BRATISLAVA, Czechoslovakia, June 10, (AP): Sergei Bubka of the Soviet Union broke his own world record in the pole vault yesterday, clearing 19 feet, 10 1/4 inches (6.05 metres) on the second day of an International Amateur Athletic Federation meet.

Bubka, who bettered the mark of 19-9-1-4 (6.03) he set June 23, 1987, in Prague, cleared the height on his first attempt. "I can tell you that I was doing six metres easily at my training sessions recently. I am in great shape," Bubka told CTK, the official Czechoslovak news agency.

Bubka, 25, is the only pole vault jumper to clear 6.00 metres (19-8 1/4). After his record-setting vault, he had the bar raised to 6.10 metres (20-0 1/4), but symbolically walked under the bar.

"After breaking the record I had no competition and no motivation," Bubka said. "To smash the world record twice in the same day is probably too much."

Bubka's achievement, his eighth world record, since he skyrocketed into fame with a vault of 5.85 metres (19-2 1/4) at Bratislava in 1984, was the second world record set this year.

Risen Star named early favourite

ELMONT, N.Y., June 10, (Reuter): A field of just six horses was entered in yesterday's official draw for the 120th running of the Belmont Stakes, the third leg of American thoroughbred racing's triple crown, to be run at Belmont Park tomorrow.

Risen Star, winner of the May 21 Preakness Stakes, the middle leg of the "triple crown" which began with the Kentucky Derby on May 7, has been named the 8-5 early favourite and will start from the fifth position.

Kentucky Derby winner, Winning Colours was the second choice of the oddsmakers at 9-5.

Seoul marks 100th day before Olympics open

SEOUL, South Korea, June 10, (AP): Thousands of people yesterday marked the 100th day before the Olympics open by raising the flags of the 161 competing nations at City Hall Plaza.

Traditional instruments wailed Korean tunes, and a marching band of women dressed in blue shorts, white boots and rainbow sashes sounded a fanfare while thousands of people paused along the sides of the plaza to watch the half-hour ceremony.

Expected

A giant "100" glowed from a signboard atop City Hall that has been counting down to the Olympics for more than a year. The biggest-ever Games, with 12,000 athletes expected, are scheduled Sept 17-Oct 2 in the South Korean capital, the second Asian city to host the Summer Olympics. The 1964 Games were held in Tokyo.

In recent months, Olympic flags had flown from the double circle of flagpoles around an island of greenery and a fountain in the centre of an intersection of three major streets. They were replaced yesterday by the 161 national flags, along with one Olympic flag and a Seoul Olympic flag.

Four people manned each flagpole for the ceremony. A person dressed as a Scouter, the Seoul Olympics' tiger mascot, stood beside mayor Kim Yong-Nae and other dignitaries.

These are the first Summer Olympics since 1976 in which both the United States and the Soviet-bloc countries are competing. North Korea, Albania, Cuba, Nicaragua, Ethiopia and the Seychelles have not accepted invitations to enter the Games in Seoul. North Korea has said it won't enter unless it is made a co-host.

Meanwhile, sports officials briefed President Roh Tae-Woo on the progress of preparations for the Games.

"The only problems remaining now are to stage the Games safely by preventing security provocations or terrorism and have the entire people participate in the Games as 'our Olympics'... to turn the Games into a festival of joy, harmony and peace," Roh said.

I'm the best: Tyson

ATLANTIC CITY, New Jersey, June 10, (AP): Heavyweight boxing champion Mike Tyson was in a oo-oonsense mood Wednesday at a news conference for his title defence against Michael Spinks June 27.

While Spinks answered questions in a laidback manner, Tyson bristled at many questions.

After Spinks, who was stripped of his International Boxing Federation heavyweight championship, said he still feels like a champion, Tyson ooted that Spinks had given up the title rather than fight him last year.

Champion

"I'll die or give up anything before I give up my title," Tyson said.

"He's a champioo? Give me a break. He never fought anybody but (Larry) Holmes. He never fought anyone in the top 10 — a Tony Tubbs, a Pinklon Thomas. Give me a break."

Tyson, the undisputed champion, is a 4-1 favourite, as was Thomas Hearns, who was upset by Iran Barkley for the World Boxing Council middleweight title Monday night.

Asked if he thought the same thing could happen to him, Tyson, 21, snapped, "I'm oot Tommy Hearns. I'm the best fighter in the world."

Tyson appeared extremely sensitive to questions about his personal life.

There have been reports of feuding in the Tyson camp involving the fighter, manager Bill Cayton and promoter Don King.

Asked if his relationship with Cayton would change after the fight, Tyson said, "that's none of your business. I'll take care of that after the fight. I'm an independent man. I can handle myself."

Then, he lashed out at the media, snapping, "Whatever good relationships we've had, throw it away."

He complained about what has been written about him.

Shortly thereafter, a caller on what was a satellite hookup, said to Tyson, "You're expecting a child. What was your favourite subject in school that you could help a child with?"

"You shouldn't ask personal questions like that," Tyson replied.

There could be a problem about the length of the fight. The IBF, whose turn it is to be in control of a fight for the undisputed heavyweight title, has a 15-round title limit which will not change until September.

"I have decided it will be a 12-round fight and I hope Bob Lee will reconsider," Cayton said of Lee, who is president of the IBF.

"If Mike steps into the ring as our champion, he'll step into a 15-round fight," said Lee.

Ali shows old form in interview

WASHINGTON, June 10, (Reuter): Boxing great Muhammad Ali, whose speech has been slurred and stumbling in recent years, is talking as rapidly and as clearly as of old thanks to new medicine he is taking for Parkinson's Syndrome, the Washington Post said yesterday.

The Post said the new treatment has allowed Ali to talk as rapidly as a machine gun as he sprays forth comments on everyone from Jesse Jackson to Mikhail Gorbachev.

The former heavyweight champion has cut a tragic picture in recent years because of his slurred speech that has led many people to assume he took too many head blows in the ring.

"I bet you're surprised I'm talking this good," Ali said in an interview with the Post.

Headed, "see, I'm oot stupid. I'm not brain damaged. The mind is good. I just sometimes have trouble articulating."

He said he was now taking new medication that "makes a real difference," but declined to discuss it in detail.

Caused

Ali suffered from Parkinson's Syndrome, which is related to Parkinson's disease and was caused by the many beatings he took in the ring. It is a progressive neurological degeneration that causes muscles to be unresponsive.

The ex-champion was philosophical about his illness. "God gave me this physical impairment to remind me that I am not the greatest. He is," Ali said.

On other subjects, Ali suggested that the time was not yet right for black civil rights activist Jesse Jackson to become president.

"I think timing is everything," he said, adding, "And I don't think the time is right for Jesse to be the leader of the free world. He needs to prove that he is not just a cheerleader."

Irish relish clash with injury-hit England

STUTTGART, West Germany, June 10, (Reuters). England, hit by familiar injury worries, face their first major test since the 1986 World Cup in Mexico when they meet Ireland in Sunday's opening European Championship Group Two match.

With central defenders Mark Wright and Dave Watson very doubtful, captain and midfield inspiration Bryan Robson could be pressed into service as a makeshift deputy at the back for a clash which the Irish are approaching with considerable relish.

"We are looking forward to it," said coach Jack Charlton, the World Cup-winning Englishman whose discipline and tactical acumen has guided the Irish to their first appearance in the finals of a major tournament on the crest of a 10-match unbeaten run.

"We know England have had an in-and-out last year. And we know they have three or four world-class players. But we shall play to win outright," Charlton said.

"We have never approached any game differently since I took over. We overtook for a draw. It is not our way of playing. We intend to win — and I shall have no feelings for the opposition at all."

Charlton has a full strength squad to pick from and is unlikely to upset the team which has performed so well recently, save for the return of the gifted Kevin Sheedy in midfield after a calf strain.

But England coach Bobby Robson, faced with a similar situation to that which bedevilled England two years ago in Mexico, will be unable to announce his team until the last moment on Sunday.

As well as injuries to Watson (thigh strain) and Wright (hamstring), he also has doubts about the fitness of Bryan Robson, the 1986 World Cup winner's leading scorer Gary Lineker (knee), and midfielder Trevor Steven (hip).

To add to this problems, rumours abounded yesterday about the fitness of Bryan Robson who was withdrawn from a practice match against local part-timers VFR Heilbronn.

In that game, which England won unimpressively 4-0, only midfielder Gles Hoddie — who has not started a match for his country since September last year — shone as a second-half substitute alongside Monaco club-mate Mark Hateley in attack.

Several England players appeared tired after their long domestic season and, unlike the Irish, have admitted they would have preferred less familiar opposition in their opening game.

But with Lineker, Peter Beardsley and John Barnes to call upon, England should have the ability in attack to steal a narrow victory if their defence can hold out in what promises to be a typically competitive and physical British affair.

Probable teams:

England — Peter Shilton, Gary Stevens, Tony Adams, Mark Wright or Bryan Robson, Kenny Sanson, Chris Waddle, Neil Webb, Bryan Robson or Glenn Hoddie, John Barnes, Gary Lineker, Peter Beardsley.

Ireland — Pat Bonner, Chris Morris, Mick McCarthy, Kevin Moran, Chris Hughton, Ray Houghton, Paul McGrath, Ronnie Whelan, Kevin Sheedy, John Aldridge, Frank Stapleton.

Yesterday, West German police in riot gear staged a mock battle with colleagues posing as English soccer hooligans in Munich's Olympic stadium.

A Reuters photographer saw about 250 baton-wielding police charging about 100 fans who were shouting slogans in English.

They then went into the crowd with horses and dogs, pulling supporters away and herding them handcuffed into police vans.

The two-hour riot training, held in and around the stadium which hosts the June 25 final, was intended to be secret. Regular visitors to the Olympic complex were kept away.

The practice took place as foreign fans began drifting into West German cities. Across the country police were congregating in potential trouble spots to pre-empt any violent outbreaks.

Leaving

The two matches which most concern the authorities involve England — against Ireland in Stuttgart and against the Netherlands in Dusseldorf next Wednesday.

"We're not leaving anything to chance," Dusseldorf police chief Wolfgang Rodax said.

But police, who have been planning anti-hooligan tactics for a year, say their aim is not to saturate towns with officers but to pick out and swoop on trouble-makers.

"Whatever criticism there might be, this will not be the European police championships," said Cologne police director Winrich Granitzka.

Denmark seek revenge against Spain

HANOVER, West Germany, June 10, (Reuters). Denmark will be seeking revenge when the face Spain in the European Championship finals tomorrow, having lost to them in the 1986 tournament and the 1986 World Cup in Mexico.

Victory would be sweet to coach Sepp Piontek's side, who attacking style proved the revelation of the finals in France last time around until they went out to the Spaniards on penalties in the semifinals.

The revelation was confirmed in Mexico when the Danes produced the most exciting play of the first round, only to crash 5-1 against Spain in the second round.

Tactics

But Piontek warned against making too much of the forthcoming game where rash tactics could spell defeat and an early exit from the 16-day championship.

"We won't attack as much against the Spaniards as we did in earlier matches," he said. "I only because our strikers haven't been on target very often recently."

Spain's star striker Emilio Butragueno warned his colleagues against complacency. "We have no right to feel superior, those two victories don't mean that," he said.

Butragueno discounted his own showing two years ago in Mexico, when his four goals were responsible for knocking out the Danes. "It was a one-off case," he said.

The feeling was echoed by Spanish trainer Miguel Munoz who added: "The Danish team is as strong as in 1986."

Neither side reports any injury worries before the game in the drizzle-swept northern German plain, where up to 30,000 Danes from across the nearby border will provide up to 50 per cent of the fans in the sold-out Niedersachsenstadion.

"The boys are all fit — the question is whether they are in top form," Piontek said.

"The potential of the Spanish team is much the same as in 1986," said Munoz, whose side reached the quarterfinals of the World Cup two years ago before losing to Belgium on penalties.

"We've brought in a few new players, but overall our strength is exactly the same."

Probable teams: Denmark — Troels Rasmussen, Soeren Busk, Morten Olsen, Ivan Nielsen, John Sivebaek, John Helt, Jan Heintze, Soeren Lerby, Michael Laudrup, Preben Elkjaer, Flemming Povlsen.

Spain — Andoni Zubizarreta, Tomas, Manuel Sanchis, Jose Antonio Camacho, Ricardo Gallego, Victor, Michel, Rafael Gordillo, Martin Vazquez, Emilio Butragueno, Jose Maria Bakero.

Wimbledon title holder Cash was beaten 7-6 6-4 by fellow Australian Darren Cahill, while Connors fell to the cavalier attack of Frenchman Guy Forget 6-4 7-6.

Cash, seeded second to Sweden's Stefan Edberg, dismissed his third round defeat as irrelevant in terms of his Wimbledon defence which begins on June 20 and added: "It's a bonus."

Persistent morning rain left the courts treacherous, but Connors, the number three seed, refused to make excuses.

"Sure it was greasy, it was greasy on both sides of the net," said the world's best 35-year-old player who lies a remarkable fifth in the rankings.

Saturated Edberg was also under threat for a considerable time against South African-born American Johan Kriek, winning 4-6 6-1 6-2 in the first match of the day on a saturated centre court.

"Johan and I thought about walking off after three games," said Edberg, the least controversial of men. "It was very difficult to keep your feet and could have been dangerous."

Fourth-seeded Boris Becker, who will be carrying a lot of smart money to win his third Wimbledon title next month, remained Edberg's likeliest opponent in Sunday's final with a smooth 6-3 6-4 win over American Bill Scanlon.

Gatting sacked as England captain

LONDON, June 10, (Reuters). John Emburey was named England cricket captain today, taking over from Mike Gatting who was sacked yesterday.

Gatting was stripped of the captaincy by the Test and County Cricket Board (TCCB) for behaving irresponsibly during the first Test by inviting a woman back to his hotel room.

Test

TCCB chairman Peter May said Gatting had told the selectors he did not wish to be considered for the second Test against West Indies which starts at Lord's next Thursday.

Cricket authorities said yesterday they accepted his denial of sexual misconduct with the woman on Monday night during the first cricket Test match against the West Indies. But they added they were concerned at his admission that he had behaved irresponsibly.

Former England captain Peter

May, chairman of the Test and County Cricket Board selectors, told reporters: "No player must put himself in a position whereby the image of English cricket is damaged in any way."

Gatting had told the selectors he was celebrating his 31st birthday and invited a woman to his hotel room near Leicester, central England for a drink, and that for a time they were alone.

The bearded cricketer, who is married with two children, issued a statement last night saying: "I categorically deny allegations of sexual impropriety which have been made against me by certain newspapers."

"I have instructed my solicitors to commence the necessary action against those newspapers for libel."

The woman at the centre of the row, 20-year-old Louise Shipman has told reporters that she and two other women accompanied Gatting and other members of the England team to the hotel.

Four other players, Allau Lamb, Phillip DeFreitas, Paul Jarvis and Paul Downton, have been asked to give their explanations to the selectors about widespread newspaper allegations to sex romps.

Emburey, 35, will lead England for the first time in a Test after spending more than two years as Gatting's number two. He has also served under Gatting at Middlesex.

Grace

Ironically Emburey had to pull out of a benefit game for Gatting and dash to Lord's to accept the captaincy invitation.

He then assisted the selectors pick the side for the second Test which will be announced on Sunday.

Until Gatting's fall from grace, Emburey's own place in the Test team had been in danger.

In the drawn first Test at Trent Bridge, he took a fearful thrashing from Viv Richards and Carl Hooper.

The off-spinner, once recognised as one of the game's most economically slow bowlers, was hammered for 37 in three overs at one stage.

Emburey has a shrewd tactical brain and is a popular team member, so the other players should respond to him during his crisis take-over.

He has had two brief ventures at leading England — in a one-day tournament in Sharjah last year following England's victorious Ashes tour to Australia and, again in 1987, in a limited overs game against Pakistan at Trent Bridge when Gatting was ruled out with a badly injured toe.

The other candidates for the captaincy were Graham Gooch and David Gower, although Gower is still associated with the 10 successive Test defeats by West Indies between 1984 and 1986.

Olympic teams take part in Kenya tourney

NAIROBI, Kenya, June 10, (AP). The first international hockey tournament to be held in Africa in 20 years opens here tomorrow in a pre-Olympic warm-up pitting teams from Canada, India, Kenya, Pakistan and the Soviet Union, the organisers said today.

"Spectators will see all brands of hockey and some of the finest world players will exhibit their craft in Nairobi," chief Kenyan organiser Hardev Singh said.

The tournament is the first in a series of pre-Olympic dress-rehearsals planned by Kenya to feature athletics, boxing and soccer.

Kenyan sports officials have not announced the dates for other events.

Basis

Singh, who is also the deputy secretary of the African Hockey Confederation, said the tournament will be on a round-robin league basis, leading to semi-finals June 22-23. The final match is scheduled for June 25.

Matches will be at the 10,000-seat synthetic turf pitch, the only one in Africa, in a suburb of Nairobi, the Kenyan capital.

Kenya invited all 12 hockey teams scheduled to compete in this year's Olympics to the tournament. However, only four could come to Nairobi because of previous commitments, Singh said.

Derbyshire win

LONDON, June 10, (Reuters). Derbyshire beat Glamorgan by 14 runs in a Benson and Hedges Cup (55 overs-a-side) semifinal cricket match at Swansea today.

Scores: Derbyshire 217 for eight innings closed. Glamorgan 203 in 54.2 overs (M. Holding five for 31).

Final: Derbyshire v Hampshire, at Lord's on July 9.

Dutch and Soviets set to exhibit their skills

COLOGNE, West Germany, June 10, (Reuters). The Netherlands and the Soviet Union, two of the world's most gifted teams, should provide a rich soccer spectacle when they clash in the European Championship finals on Sunday — if caution does not cramp their style.

The potential for adventure is personified in opposing attackers Ruud Gullit and Igor Belanov, European Footballers of the Year present and past who each could turn this critical initial encounter in a moment's brilliance.

Fancied

The Dutch have languished since the second of their two World Cup final appearances in 1978 but are now widely fancied following the European exploits of club PSV Eindhoven and Ajax Amsterdam and the flowering of Gullit's multifarious skills.

The Soviet Union, second to none in adventure and zest, embellished the 1986 Mexico World Cup and subsequently enhanced their reputation by defeating defending champions France in qualifying for these European finals.

But a reckless commitment to all-out attack has undone them in the past, most graphically in Mexico when a superb Belanov hat-trick could not save them from defeat by dogged Belgium.

Now, however, a note of restraint has been sounded by team chief Valery Lobanovsky, whose 20-man squad again comprises a majority of players from his own exciting club Dynamo Kiev.

"We have learned the lessons from Mexico and will play more rationally than in the World Cup. The most important thing in football is to win. I don't expect such attractive football in the European Championship," he said.

Graf apologises again

LONDON, June 10, (Reuters). World number one Steffi Graf had to apologise for the second time within a week when she was late for a tennis date with the Princess of Wales here today.

"The embarrassed 18-year-old West German arrived 20 minutes late at the Vanderbilt Club where the princess opened the new European office of the Women's International Tennis Association."

Last Saturday in Paris, Graf apologised to the crowd at the French Open after taking only 34 minutes to win the women's title by beating Russian Natalia Zvereva 6-0 6-0 in the women's singles final.

This time Graf was even more embarrassed after keeping the princess waiting.

"The traffic was terrible, it took us almost two hours to get here from Wimbledon," Graf said.

The princess replied: "It's typical of London at the moment."

Graf added: "What made it worse was that the driver got lost and in the end I was reading the map."

Graf travelled to the club with father Peter and coach Pavel Slozil, who said: "It's inexcusable to be late for anything, especially today. Steffi is never late, even for practice, she loves playing tennis so much."

Later the princess took to the court to face Graf in a "friendly and social" mixed doubles. The two then teamed up against a men's pair.

Mabuhay take KPTC to task

By Gail Seery

THE third round of the Kapilku-organised 1988 Filipino basketball tournament took place yesterday at the Keifan stadium. Pinoy Restaurant beat RIC by a resounding 113 points to 62. Kay & Associates lost to Alexco by a narrow margin of 101:107. AG&P took victory over Safe-way by a comfortable 87 to 63. Mabuhay trounced KPTC by 118 points to 75; and Kuwait Regency Hotel suffered a convincing 117 to 73 defeat at the hands of Wood Group.

Two of the strongest games of the day were walkovers. KPBC, last year's champions, and still one of this year's best teams, were not playing, but it is clear that two other teams are likely to join them in the finals, Mabuhay Restaurant, and of course, AG&P.

In the Mabuhay Restaurant vs KPTC game, it was obvious from the start that Mabuhay could not be stopped from taking a win. Even so, KPTC managed to keep level, and at one stage, to draw ahead in the opening ten minutes

Mabuhay were one of the most pleasing teams to watch on Friday, along with AG&P. The team consists of many players from last year's Meriden team, but Mabuhay have not only strong players, but also good teamwork. A capable player like Bahiera scored only nine points during the game, but set up many more baskets with some excellent co-ordination with Dingson and Corpuz. Again and again these three proved unstoppable in attack, and solid in defence.

Unlike some of the other teams where there are one or two good players who have to carry the match — like Wood, who cannot afford to allow Celso Tuedes off the court for any length of time, and Regency, who fell apart without Toti Vergara, most of Mabuhay's players are very good indeed.

The score at half-time was 55 points to 38 in Mabuhay's favour, with Bahiera taking a 3pt basket right on the buzzer. The second half continued in the same vein. The KPTC players misplaced a throw, and it landed in the hands of Mabuhay's Eduardo, who, for a moment, seemed a little confused as to what he should do with the unexpected gift. Fortunately he made the right decision, and the team edged a little bit further ahead.

To be fair, KPTC kept fighting valiantly long after there seemed to be any hope of salvaging the game. In particular Sacusa and Aggabao worked hard, but it wasn't enough, and a very blatant foul from Aggabao on Reyes was disappointing.

Impossible

All the Mabuhay team seem to have deserved a mention, but of course, it is impossible to name every player. Good work was put in by Bahiera, Menez, Reyes and Nario, but it was Corpuz and Dingson who dominated the game. Principal scorers for Mabuhay were Corpuz with 28 points, Dingson with 20, and Reyes with 16.

Principal scorers for KPTC were Sacusa with 22, Aggabao with 19 and Corpuz with 13.

Accounts of Friday's other games will be printed in tomorrow's Filipino Digest.
